KINGSBRIDGE REAL ESTATE COMPANY.

The property of this Company at Kingsbridge consists of over 300 residence lots on Kingsbridge Heights, located on Kingsbridge Road, Sedgwick, Heath, and Bailey Avenues and Harlem River Terrace.

They are specially adapted for residences on account of their accessibility by broad macadamized avenues, the protective restrictions against objectionable structures and trades, their suburban environments, and the many facilities of rapid transit to the business centres of the city.

The Elevated Roads (6th & 9th Avs.) connecting at 155th Street on same platform with the N. Y. & Putnam R. R., as well as fast trains from the Grand Central Depot on the N. Y. Central R. R., make access to the property quick, frequent, and direct.

The Great Subway Rapid Transit System, now running to 157th St., will soon be opened to Kingsbridge, and the running time on Express trains from this point will be 25 minutes to 42d St., and 35 minutes to Wall Street.

The title to the lots is absolutely perfect, and guaranteed to each purchaser by a Title Company, thus rendering future transfers easy and inexpensive.

Why Pay Rent

for your home? At the end of this year or at the end of ten years you will have nothing to show for it. Let me show you how by small monthly payments you can own your own home at Larchmont Park. The payments can be so arranged that they will be no burden upon you, in fact no larger than your rent is now. This property has been fully developed and improved, which in plain English means that you will not be called on for any assessments. When you buy at Larchmont Park you know that all sewers are laid and finished, that water, gas and electricity are ready for you, the streets macadamized and sidewalks built. I will tell you all about this in answer to your inquiry.

Y. M. C. A. WILL SELL ITS NIBLO LIBRARY

Books Bought with Theatrical Man's Money Seldom Used.

EARLY AND COSTLY VOLUMES

Announcement of Sale, Following Rejection of Actors by Western Branch of Body, Arouses Interest.

The stage and religion are curiously connected in a sale of books that will take place at the rooms of the Merwin-Clayton Sales Company on May 25 and 26. According to the catalogue, a private collection of rare books will then be sold.

As a matter of fact the books are from the library of the Young Men's Christian Association, and include manuscripts of old date, early editions of the classics, many old Bibles in rare editions, the works of poets, critics, humorists, theologians, and reformers, engravings by early masters, and books in special bindings—not such a collection as outsiders, and probably many insiders, knew that the association had. They were distinctly out of the line of the association's library, and probably not one in a thousand of the members knew that the library had them, or, knowing, cared to look at them. Why, then, did the Christian Association spend its money in buying them?

The answer shows how the stage was connected with the association, and the curious connection between the two different bodies comes to view just as a Western branch of the association refuses to admit to membership three men who are actors.

On Sept. 7, 1878, the will of William Niblo, famous as the first proprietor of Niblo's Garden—afterward Niblo's Theatre—in this city, was probated, Niblo having died in the preceding June. The sixteenth clause of the will reads:

"I give, devise, and bequeath all the rest, residue, and remainder of my estate * * * to my executors in trust * * * to convert the same into money * * * and pay over the net proceeds * * * to the Young Men's Christian Association of the City of New York * * * for the purposes of such association, and I request and desire that the same be applied by the said association under the direction of Robert Hoe, Jr., toward increasing and maintaining that portion of the library of the said association now known as the 'Niblo Library.'"

The association took the bequest under Mr. Niblo's conditions. Mr. Hoe, always a collector, considered that the purpose of the testator would be observed best if the library should buy rarities, manuscripts, early books, good bindings, and, under his advice, it did so.

But the rare books bought out of the Niblo fund were seldom used. They took up room needed for books that were in demand, and finally, with Mr. Hoe's consent, the library decided to sell them and add what they might bring to the general fund of the association for the purchase of more necessary books. That is the reason for the sale of the private collection three weeks from now. Among the chief rarities may be named the following:

Antiphonale et Graduale Iuxta Ritum Ambrosianum, a manuscript on vellum of the late fourteenth century, described as extremely rare, and in excellent condition. A former price for it was $2,000.

Cicero de Oratore, a manuscript of the fifteenth century, also in good condition.

Heures, (the Book of Hours,) an Italian manuscript of the late fourteenth century.

The collection of incunabula is large, and embraces early editions of Alexander of Hale's "Summa Universae Theologiae," dating from 1482; of Aristotle's "Opera," by Aldus, 1497; "Ars Moriendi," an unknown edition of the work, dating from before 1480, an edition of St. Augustine's "City of God," printed at Rome in 1474; three editions of Boetius, dated 1498, 1499, and 1501; a Divine Comedy, printed in Venice in 1477, containing a life of Dante by Boccaccio; a Livy, printed at Rome before 1470—a copy which fetched $150 when it was sold last; an Aldine Statius, dated 1502; and still other specimens.

Fifty-three of the 382 lots are Bibles, in Latin, Greek, English, Dutch, German, French, Armenian, Hebrew. Among them is the first edition of the first volume of Luther's translation, dated Wittenberg, 1523; the Douai version of 1633; "Melanchton's Bible," 1545; a complete copy of the "Bishops' Bible," 1568, (a poorer copy brought $350 a few years ago;) and photographic reproductions by the Vatican and the British Museum of the Vatican and the Alexandrine Codices.

There is a first edition, in fair condition, of Irving's Knickerbocker's New York, 1809; and early editions of various famous plays, such as Webster's "Duchess of Malfy," 1623; John Banke's "The Unhappy Favourite," 1682, with prologue and epilogue by Dryden; and still others. A few of the books have been "extra illustrated." Of late such books have not sold well at auction, and it will be interesting to note how the grangerized volumes of this private collection fare when they come up for sale.

Considerable interest is taken in this sale abroad, and the catalogue is printed thus early in order that copies may be hurried over to foreign collectors.

MR. MORGAN'S INCUNABULA.

Part of Collection, Including Costliest Book, on View at Columbia.

Infinite riches in the shape of the world's earliest printed books are gathered into a little room at Columbia University, where a carefully selected portion of J. Pierpont Morgan's collection of incunabula is being shown, the exhibition ending May 20. The most celebrated book in the collection is the Gutenberg-Fust Bible, sometimes called the "Mazarine Bible," the first book produced by typography, printed in Mentz 1454-6.

The Morgan copy, on vellum, is the fine Old Testament portion from the library of the late Theodore Irwin of Oswego, whose collection of books and manuscripts was purchased en bloc by the banker-bibliophile in 1900. Seven copies of the Gutenberg Bible are now owned in this city, in public and private collections, the finest showing which can be made by any city in the world. Mr. Morgan, in addition to the copy on vellum, owns a copy on paper.

The star book of the collection, in a commercial sense, is the Latin Psalter of 1459, printed by Fust & Schoeffer, of which only thirteen copies are known, eleven of them being in public libraries. A copy in fair condition only was sold at auction in London last December for £4,000. The Morgan copy, a large and beautiful example in red morocco, is bibliographically famous as the costliest book in existence, having brought £4,050 in London in 1884 at the Thoroid sale. It cost Mr. Morgan about $26,000 four years ago. The initial letters in this book, engraved on wood and printed in red and blue ink, have been called the most beautiful specimens of this kind of ornament which the united efforts of the wood engraver and the pressman have produced.

BELMONT PARK'S CROWDS.

More Came Back Then Went—Puzzle for the Railroad.

"We have often been puzzled," said an officer of the Long Island Railroad yesterday, "over what became of a part of the race track crowds after the races. It has always been our experience that though the outgoing trains may be crowded the last of the returning trains are thinly filled. This defection is often large and cannot at all be explained by the humorous supposition that some persons are so reduced in pocketbook as to resort to foot power on the home trip. But Belmont Park has proved the exception to this, for there we carried back more persons than we took out to the track.

"In another respect Belmont Park upset calculations. On race days 40 per cent. of the crowds we carry ordinarily go to the track by way of the Flatbush Avenue terminal and 60 per cent. from Long Island City. This percentage has held steadily through several seasons. But on the opening day at Belmont Park, when we carried about 19,000 persons to the track, a full 14,000 went from Long Island City, leaving only about 26 per cent. who used the Flatbush Avenue route."

The problem of handling the crowds to the Belmont Park track on opening day was complicated by delays in the work of constructing the big terminal. Twenty-six ten-car trains were used to accommodate the race track crowds. From noon to 2:02 o'clock trains arrived at Belmont Park at an average of every 5½ minutes. After the last race, until the last train got away, trains were started from the terminal under an average headway of 4.4 minutes.

The ordinary running time between Long Island City and Belmont Park, a distance of fourteen miles, is thirty minutes. The average actual time made to the track on opening day was 33 2-3 minutes, the best time 27 minutes, the slowest 39 minutes. From Flatbush Avenue the average was 39¼ minutes, the best 33 minutes, the slowest 45 minutes. The average time to Flatbush Avenue terminal was 54 minutes, the best 43, the slowest 60.

CALLS ON NAN PATTERSON.

Miss Eva Booth Says She Believes the "Florodora" Girl Innocent.

One of the callers at the Tombs yesterday who were admitted to see Nan Patterson was Miss Eva Booth of the Salvation Army. She said that she had come merely with the purpose of seeing whether she could be of any help to the prisoner.

"I don't believe that girl is a murderess," Miss Booth declared, when about to leave the prison. "She is built of much better material than that usually found in persons guilty of such crimes. I cannot help believing her innocent of the death of Young."

The mail of the imprisoned girl has proved a surprise even to those who are most familiar with the morbid interest of the public in cases of this kind. Before noon yesterday she had received fifty-five letters, almost all of them being written by men and women who do not know her and of whom she never in her life heard before. As a rule, they were encouraging, expressing the confidence of the writers in her innocence. The few exceptions to that rule were weeded out by Lawyer O'Reilly, who goes through all the girl's mail in advance.

Both in health and spirits the girl showed such improvement yesterday that she might be regarded as fully recovered from the shock caused by the disagreement of the jury.

Coroners' Physician O'Hanlon, who examined the body of "Caesar" Young shortly after he died, said yesterday that he had come to the conclusion that the man killed himself. As reason for saying this, Dr. O'Hanlon spoke of some powder stains which he had discovered on Young's fingers.

DERAILED NEAR EXPRESS.

Crowded Local Was Within Twenty Feet of the Fast Colonial.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW ROCHELLE, May 6.—The Colonial Express, bound from Boston to Washington, which passes through this city shortly after 2 o'clock in the afternoon, narrowly escaped being wrecked to-day by crashing into the Saturday extra which left Grand Central Station at 1:20 o'clock, at the New Rochelle junction of the Harlem branch and the main line of the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad. It is said that the engineer of the main line local ran by the signal, causing his engine to jump the switch, which was set for the Colonial Express.

Within a minute after the local jumped the switch the Colonial came crashing along at the rate of forty miles an hour, and was switched from the main line tracks to the branch road. The derailed engine of the local, which was crowded with suburbanites, was within twenty feet of the express when it whizzed by. No one was hurt. Traffic on the main and branch lines was delayed for two hours.

DEBS'S FIGHT ON A. F. L. AROUSES GOMPERS'S IRE

Unions Warned to Avoid Western Socialistic Body.

JAPANESE ENTERS LABOR WAR

Federation President Denounces Him and Agrees to Meet Hayes, a Western Leader, in Joint Debate.

President Gompers and the Executive Council of the American Federation of Labor are now thoroughly up in arms against the Debs Socialists and the Industrial Union, which they have started as a rival to the American Federation of Labor. The Federation's Executive Council passed resolutions condemning the movement, which were sent to the New York unions yesterday. The Eastern unions are warned to beware of the Western movement as inimical to the trades unions and intended to disrupt them.

In New York, some of the officers of unions which belong to the American Federation of Labor are Debs Socialists and ready to take sides against Gompers. The statement of the Executive Council does not refer to these, neither does Gompers in a statement on the new movement, which he sent to the unions in New York and other Eastern cities yesterday.

Debs is also out with a statement, in which he attacks Gompers. He holds the President and the Executive Council of the American Federation of Labor responsible for the failure of the American Railroads unions strike eleven years ago.

Among other things Mr. Gompers says in his statement:

"It is not Socialism that we have been called on to combat, but the pernicious activity of Socialists who seem to have made it their particular mission in life to either dominate or destroy the trades unions. They defame and assassinate the character of men who dare to defend their convictions and who stand for the organization of trades unions.

"Is it not a fact that one may take up any Socialist Party publication or hear any party Socialist speak and find that their chief utterances are denunciations and a tirade of abuse of trades unions and of the best-known trades unionists? If the Socialists will permit the trades union movement its full opportunity for development, without attempting to make it a tail for their party kite, they may disseminate their doctrines without any protest from us, but so long as they pursue their present policy they cannot enforce our silence."

Mr. Gompers is very angry at a Japanese Socialist named Katayama, who was brought here by the Debs Socialists and who attacked the American Federation of Labor, declaring that the Eastern unions are not as progressive as those in the West. He characterizes Katayama as a "mongrel."

Mr. Gompers also replies to a challenge to a public debate on trades unionism hurled at him by Max Hayes, a Western Socialist. Hayes is one of the originators of the anti-American Federation of Labor movement. Gompers says he is ready to meet any one at the proper time and defend trades unionism.

NEW WONDERLAND PARK.

Great Uptown Resort Will Open Next Year—To Cost $2,000,000.

Final plans were made yesterday and work was begun on the new "Wonderland Park," located at Two Hundred and Eighth Street and Dykman Place. It is owned by the King's Bridge Realty Company, and will be under the management of Thompson & Rosen of the St. James Building.

The park is to have a half mile water frontage on the Harlem Ship Canal, and will contain forty acres. The water will give opportunity for many novelties.

The Subway is to run past the grounds and there will be a station at the main entrance. The proximity of the New York Central Railroad also makes access easy. It is estimated that $2,000,000 will have been expended when the park is completed. The opening is planned for May 6, 1906. It is planned to keep open all the year round. In Winter the large dance hall will be a chief place of amusement.

CHEERS FOR MRS. McLEAN.

Takes Politics Out of D. A. R., Says Dr. Steele.

Mrs. Donald McLean, the newly elected President General of the Daughters of the American Revolution, received an ovation which was personal as well as in honor of her office at a reception held at Sherry's yesterday afternoon by the New York City Chapter, Daughters of the American Revolution, of which she has been Regent for many years.

Mrs. McLean, on the arm of the Rev. Dr. Steele of Trinity Church, Chaplain of the Chapter, was escorted to the platform by a body of minute men and the Continental Guard under the command of Capt. Cornish and Major Paul. Dr. Steele made the address of welcome, which was interesting from its inference that heretofore the office of President General has had a political significance.

"You have forever settled by your election," said Dr. Steele, addressing Mrs. McLean, "the question of rights and opportunities for every chapter in the land, and have saved the order of the Daughters of the American Revolution from the domination of National politics, so that the organization cannot be used as a machine to further the political interests and aspirations of any political party or individual politician."

Mrs. McLean responded. There was an address by Mrs. Bradford Prince, wife of the Governor of New Mexico and Regent of the Daughters of the American Revolution of that State.

TIFFT FOR FULL DAY.

Head of School Board Against the Shorter Period Plan.

Henry N. Tifft, President of the Board of Education, declared his opposition to the shorter school day idea at the annual dinner of the Male Teachers' Association of Manhattan and the Bronx, held last night at the Hotel Vendome. It was his first public expression of opinion on the subject.

"I do not believe, as a general thing, in voicing my ideas on measures before the board," he said, "for fear that I may be overruled, but the question of the shortened school day and the course of study is one of such importance that I will forsake my rule. I am quite clear in my mind that children in the first and second years cannot assimilate strictly mental food for more than three and a half hours, but I am equally clear that it would be unwise to dismiss those children at the end of such a short period.

"If the vote of the parents of New York were to be taken to-morrow, I know that it would be overwhelmingly in favor of the full five-hour day. The proposition has resolved itself into school vs. street. I favor school. I don't believe in stuffing the child mentally. I know that we cannot have a healthy mind without a healthy body, and the mental programme should be interspersed with exercises which employ eye and fingers."

The dinner was one of the largest the association has ever given. Dr. John P. Conroy, Principal of Public School No. 179, presided. The full membership was present.

William P. O'Flaherty, Principal of Public School No. 67, spoke for more freedom for Principals. Dr. John H. Finley, President of the College of the City of New York; Dr. William Rabenort, Principal of Public School No. 9, and City Superintendent of Schools William H. Maxwell also addressed the banqueters.

ONE DEATH FROM SMALLPOX.

Another Case Reported from Brooklyn Boarding House.

Two cases of smallpox, one fatal, were reported last night from the boarding house kept by the Misses Alma S. and Jessie Hotchkiss at 283 State Street, Brooklyn.

Norman T. Cochran, a young man who dealt in typewriter supplies, and who boarded with the Hotchkiss sisters, died at the house on April 26 of what a doctor said was German measles. Miss Alma S. Hotchkiss, who had nursed him, and fourteen-year-old Cecil O'Donnell, who is the son of a Costa Rica planter, and who was boarding at the house while he was getting a public school education, became ill. The doctor said, that they, too, had German measles.

On Friday night another doctor was called in. His diagnosis was smallpox. He notified the Board of Health. Miss Hotchkiss died yesterday. Young O'Donnell was sent to the Kingston Avenue Hospital. The doctors said that there was no chance for the disease to spread in the neighborhood.

Benefit for Frances House.

The benefit performance of "The Grey Mare" will be seen to-morrow evening at Carnegie Lyceum, in aid of the "Frances House." This house has recently been established as a boarding house where working girls with small wages may find a pleasant and respectable home. In the play to be given next Monday evening the Wendell brothers of the Amdelus Comedy Club are kindly assisting a number of the Farmington graduates. Among the patronesses are Mrs. Fred de Peyster, Mrs. Charles Stewart Smith, Mrs. William Lanman Bull, Mrs. Andrew Carnegie, Miss Annie B. Jennings, Mrs. Mary E. Daw, and Mrs. Frederick Roosevelt.

MAY DAY REVELERS OVERFLOW THE PARK

Thousands of Children Romp on the Playgrounds.

JOYS FOR DEAF AND DUMB

Thirty-two March Over from Asylum and Have the Time of Their Lives—Busy Day for Park Donkeys.

Central Park was the liveliest place in the whole city yesterday. It was the annual Park May Day, when for the first time in the season the big lawns are thrown open to the children and they are allowed to romp on the grass at will. It was a specially gay time for the little people, though they did not all of them know just the reason for it, for, being the day of the police parade, there were only twenty-six guardians of the peace to look after the whole big playground.

Permits for 1,100 were issued for Peacock Lawn; 500 obtained permission to spend the day on the North Meadow, and others numbering from 250 up, went to Cherry Hill, Cedar Hill, the East Green, and Old Ball Ground, and this did not include the number in the Park who did not think of asking leave, but took it without the asking.

One of the biggest of the May walks was on the large playground, where William A. Dalton of West Fifty-third Street, with the assistance of his wife, several men, and a lot of pretty girls of the neighborhood, marched 500 children to the Park, each topped with a cambric cap in patriotic colors and tramping to the music of an orchestra. The Church was represented by Mrs. E. N. Nietzel of Bethany Dutch Reformed, who brought a party of 50 children, who also had a May Queen and King with crowns.

But more interesting than these parties, though they didn't have a May Day color among them, unless it was the roses in their cheeks, was a party of kindergarten babies from the Deaf and Dumb School, at Lexington Avenue and Sixty-eighth Streets. There were thirty-two of them, ranging in age from little Louis Sussman, the pet and baby of the establishment, five years old, up. The girls were all in little blue frocks, trimmed with red, and the boys in gray suits. They were in charge of two teachers, Miss Hess and Miss Wheeler, and there was a volunteer assistant who gave the children the best time of their lives. This was R. F. Wohlidka, who called at the school with a little handcart and took three of the children to the Park in it, and then gave every one of the thirty-two as many rides as could be squeezed into the time.

The donkeys in the Park were not neglected, though it was more often the boys and girls out with their papas and mammas who rode them. Most of them know thir donkeys by sight and name, and if Finnigan, Tammany, Daisy, Lady, or Muggins are out when they arrive they wait until they come in again. The happiest donkey rider yesterday was one of the unchaperoned visitors, one of the bigger little girls who had brought a tiny brother with her. She finished her fourth ride with a long indrawn breath of delight and tried to bargain for another.

"I'd take another ride if it only cost 5 cents," she said, meditatively. "I have got to save 5 cents for car fare."

DREAMLAND IS READY.

"Fighting the Flames" in a New Edition—"Hell Gate" Boat Ride a Novelty.

A gigantic statue of an angel throwing a ball is the first thing that meets the eye as one approaches the new Dreamland, which opens on Saturday. It is an allegorical figure of the creation, which promises to be a big feature at the resort this Summer. This large attraction is the same illusion that attracted much attention at the St. Louis Fair.

"Fighting the Flames," so popular last year, has been remodeled, and the act itself will be worked out on new lines. There will be the usual number of rescues from the burning buildings, and jumping into the life-saving nets will make additional excitement.

"Hell Gate" is the title of an ingenious boat ride, which carries passengers to subterranean depths. The voyage is made in open boats, which circle around the inclosure until the centre is reached, when they disappear. Below is a journey through openings in rocks and into stalactite caves.

Some of the other entertainments sure to attract attention are: The Hiram Maxim's Airships, The Flea Circus, Touring Through Europe in an Automobile, Altheer's Dogs, Monkey and Pony Circus, and The Streets of Asia.

Schiller, Most Beloved of German Poets

His Life Story, So Full of Romance, Recalled by the Celebration of the Hundredth Anniversary of His Death.

—William Tell. Act III; Scene III.

Childhood, Youth, and Manhood of the Author of "William Tell"—What He Owed to the Duke of Wurttemberg—Sensation Aroused by "The Robbers"—His Interesting Love Affairs—His Meeting and Association with Goethe.

THE son of a baker's daughter and a military barber-surgeon, (who came in time to be a Captain in the Duke of Württemberg's army,) Johann Christoph Friedrich Schiller was born Nov. 10, 1759, at Marbach, in Suabia. A hundred years ago—less two days—he died at Weimar, in his forty-sixth year, and was borne at dead of night upon the shoulders of his friends to a vault in the Churchyard of St. James. In 1826 the remains were exhumed and, after the skull had rested for a time upon the Court Library table, placed in an oaken coffin in the ducal mausoleum of Karl August of Weimar. There they rest now, hard by all that is mortal of Goethe and the Duke who was the patron of both—Germany's two great poets and her prince of poets.

The hundredth anniversary of Schiller's birth was nobly celebrated in 1859; the centenary of his death is being variously commemorated during the current year.

"He well deserves," says Calvin Thomas in his admirable biography, where English-speaking folk who are not students, may find all that they need know about Schiller, the man, "the name of a national poet; indeed, it would be hard to find a modern man who deserves it better. Critics there have always been to find fault with this and that, yet he remains after a century the most truly popular of German poets, not the most admired by the literary class, or by the outside world, but the most beloved in his own country."

\+ \+ \+

In the first half of the nineteenth century savage partisans spilled copious ink and waged a long, foolish, and furious battle as to whether Schiller or Goethe was the greater. The echoes of the conflict linger still, and all the world knows what Goethe himself in 1825 said of the matter. "These twenty years," said he, "the public has been contending as to which is the greater, Schiller or I. They ought rather to be glad that they have a brace of such fellows to quarrel about."

But these are not really important matters—matters of criticism never are.

The child, Fritz Schiller, grew up first at Lorch, a village thirty miles east of Stuttgart, his father being then a recruiting officer, whose invidious business it was to "crimp" men for the mercenary army which the Duke of Württemberg gathered and hired out abroad after the fashion of those maligned Hessians whom King George about the same time bought from their Prince to fight Gen. Washington and the patriot fathers. They say Captain Schiller was a kindly soul, who made "crimping" as pleasant to the "crimped" as might be, which is not saying much, perhaps. He was, at all events, a pious man at home, and very punctilious about religious observances—a new list of which he invented for his own family use. The boy loved best his mother, who was good and sentimental after the old approved German fashion for women—the fashion the Kaiser still wrote upon his countrywomen. The Schiller family was always poor enough, and Fritz had an elder sister, Christophine. The boy went to the village school and began by being extremely [illegible]. It is related that he liked to play "church," and in his play he [illegible] and once having for all his [illegible] stepped away [illegible] him out, he ran home very fast, and, going with tears to his mother, switch in hand, begged her, as having the tenderer touch, to bestow before his father got home the whipping that was coming to him.

Other boys who never grew to be great poets have done the like. When Fritz was seven years old his father moved to Ludwigsburg, and nine years later the old Captain took charge of the Duke of Württemberg's forests at Castle Solitude. This Duke was the flagrant sinner Karl Eugen, and Castle Solitude only one of his many fantastic extravagances. Karl Eugen (who had come into his dukedom at the age of sixteen years) had misbehaved himself scandalously, driven the beautiful Princess, his wife, away from his palace, and entertained riotously in her stead many lively and rapacious ladies-errant; he crimped his loyal subjects (as we have seen) into a brilliant and unnecessary army, and hiring this army to the King of France, spent the proceeds upon his pleasures. Finally, the people of his capital, Stuttgart, displeasing him, he had moved his Court to Ludwigsburg. There he was spending vast sums upon his castle and park and the festivities which made both gay and of no good repute with prudent persons and moralists. "Fatherland," said his serene Highness, when it was represented to him that the country was suffering from his courses. "Fatherland! Bah! I am the fatherland!" It was here that little Fritz did some further growing up, and here that he saw the performances at the Duke's theatre, which were apt to be French and Italian. Of course he played theatre as he had formerly played church. All boys do. He went to a convent school and learned his lessons well enough—wrote school verses also. In his fourteenth year he wrote a "Hymn to the Sun." However, Duke Karl Eugen about this time, having tired himself out with the livelier amusements, took a fancy to a lady less gay than usual, and at the same time fell upon the educational fad.

He set up a school called a military academy at his Castle of Solitude, of which the lady (Franziska von Hohenheim, whom he afterward duly married—his ill-used Duchess being dead) was honorary patroness and the Duke himself the fountain of all authority. The discipline of this Karlschule was severe. The élèves lived and moved, says Thomas, "in accordance with a rigid routine. They rose at six and marched to the breakfast room, where an overseer gave them their orders to pray, to eat, to pray again, and then to march back." After lessons till 1 o'clock came dinner in full uniform—blue coat, white waistcoat and breeches, a three-cornered hat and a queue. His Highness in person gave after grace the order to fall to upon the meat. More lessons followed, of course. Into this school the Duke took young Fritz Schiller, his parents yielding up to their sovereign all their rights and authority over the lad. Schiller, who was at the time a lean, shambling youth, did not take kindly to military discipline, but he learned Latin—even some Greek—and dutifully wrote poems to Franziska. He still for a season wished to be a divinity student, but divinity might not be learned at Karlschule.

In 1776 the Duke removed his school to Stuttgart and added a medical department, in which [illegible] rolled, though he, with certain companions, spent much time upon literary matters. In 1777 he published a poem called "The Conqueror," in which, to use Calvin Thomas's own words, the "lurid images and wild syntax fairly pack the German language." There were orations, too, in fulsome praise of the Duke—but that was merely the fashion of the time in regard of princes.

They relate that young Schiller was something of a mimic and the fame of the accomplishment reached Karl Eugen's ears. Wherefore, that ruler, strolling by once with his beloved Franziska upon his arm, commanded the boy to give upon the spot an imitation of his high serene self.

Schiller, they say, held back at first, then took the Duke's walking stick from his hand, looked him over, and asked him questions—much such questions as the Duke commonly put to the boys. When the high serene answers didn't suit, "Oh," says Schiller, "you are an ass," and he laid hold of Franziska's arm and stalked airily away from his astonished sovereign. However, the Duke behaved very well indeed for a Duke. "Come now," he said, "leave Franzele (so he called the lady) to me."

Schiller was not often given to such pranks as this, but he was much of a young radical at heart in those days. He was even then writing his famous "Robbers," but he remained in the school (much against his will) till 1780. In 1781, finding no publisher for his manuscript, he printed "The Robbers" himself with borrowed money. This was the play of which a certain German Prince declared: "If I had been God and about to create the world, and I had foreseen that Schiller would write 'The Robbers' in it, I should not have created it."

(though Schiller in the beginning professed it was not for the boards) got very soon upon the stage and grew at once famous and infamous. Editions multiplied (by piracy and otherwise) and there rose a howl like that which "Raffles," the gentleman burglar, raised in New York the other day—only much louder. Newspapers printed stories of many good German schoolboys inspired by this pernicious drama to become bandits and thieves. One young gentleman was actually hanged for highway robbery at Strasburg, and he at least put the blame of his crime upon bad books. In Leipsic burglary and petit larceny grew so rampant that the city forbade the further performances of "The Robbers." As for the French Republicans, those enthusiasts took Schiller's first play as a revolutionary document of great mark, and, in due time, when they were on the top of the heap, made Schiller (by a diploma to that effect) an honorary citizen of the French Republic along with Washington, Kosciusko, Klopstock, and Anacharsis Cloots. To be sure, Schiller's name appeared in the diploma as M. Gille. This, however, did not happen till 1792, which, by the way, was the date of the first translation of "The Robbers" into English.

Amelia—If you love me you will not refuse me one little request.
France—None! None! If you ask no more than my life
Amelia—O, if that is the case! then..... hate me!

—The Robbers: Act I, Scene II.

\+ \+ \+

Schiller had now set up as physician in Stuttgart, where his chief business, "dosing sick grenadiers," was not pecuniarily remunerative. He went to Mannheim in the Bavarian Palatinate to prepare a stage version of his play for the theatre there. Then he went again to see his play, whereupon the Duke ordered him under arrest as a "deserter," and further, on complaint of certain Swiss, who conceived that the play had slandered in his work one of [illegible]

See the silvery bubbles spring!
Good! the mass is melting now!
Let the salts we duly bring
Purge the flood and speed the flow.

—The Lay Of The Bell.

[illegible] to write no more "comedies." It was soon after this that Schiller did "desert"—ran away from Karl Eugen and Württemberg for good, sheltering at first at Mannheim, (where he got little comfort, the Mannheimers fearing the Duke,) and then in the house of the Widow von Wolzogen, in the little village of Bauerbach, near Meiningen.

\+ \+ \+

If, as has appeared, many good people looked upon the author of "The Robbers" as a red revolutionist, an iconoclast, a dangerous enemy of the established order, a literary firebrand, he had even something in common with the contemporary arch-iconoclast Bernard Shaw. He wrote critiques of his own play. He spoke cruelly of its faults—which he perfectly discerned and pointed out with shameful lack of consideration for an author's feelings. To be sure, he did not [illegible] the action "barbarous." He was so unmerciful, in fact, that one correspondent (Schiller's review was, unlike Shaw's, anonymous) set in earnestly to defend Schiller the poet from the cruelty of Schiller the nameless reviewer.

Schiller's youthful love affairs were quaint—even as such things go with poets. First, as a young physician in Stuttgart, he wrote velvement poems to his landlady, Frau Luise Vischer. He called her Laura, and longed (in rhyme) her "very breath to drink—his life in hers to sink." Bulwer translates the poem with the aid of hints from Herrick's "Nightpiece to Julia." At Bauerbach, in hiding in Frau von Wolzogen's cottage, (he was known there as Dr. Ritter,) he nursed a sadly irresolute love for the Fräulein Lotte von Wolzogen, a flaxen-haired schoolgirl of some seventeen summers. He liked Lotte more than a little, (she was not at Bauerbach,) and wrote tender letters to her mother. When Schiller was in love he always wrote tender letters—generally to some one else than the object of his affection. Calvin Thomas says what the poet was really in love [illegible] was not little Lotte, but "the ideal [illegible] play "Fiesco" in the meantime, and was working at Bauerbach upon "Cabal and Love," his "bourgeois tragedy." In 1783 he became playwright in ordinary to the theatre at Mannheim, where his "Fiesco" and "Cabal and Love" were put on. Schiller was not happy in this employment, and the management, after a year, considered him a bad investment. In 1784 he was deep in debt and [illegible] more, in his irresolute fashion, in love.

\+ \+ \+

His publisher's daughter, Margarete Schwan, a lively young woman, was taking flutterings in his heart as of doves—dovelike cooings also there were, but he owed Frau von Wolzogen a debt of gratitude. Therefore he proposed in June for the hand of her daughter Lotte, and put off till later his offer for Margarete. Visiting Frankfort, he met there a seductive lady poet, married already, but going upon the stage for the enlivenment of a monotonous state. "In the very first hours," writes Schiller of this lady, "our souls understood each other." Yet nothing came of any of these affairs. Instead, the poet began to seek the hand of the Baroness von Kalb, whose [illegible] had been blighted and her marriage [illegible] love. To her, also, he wrote [illegible]

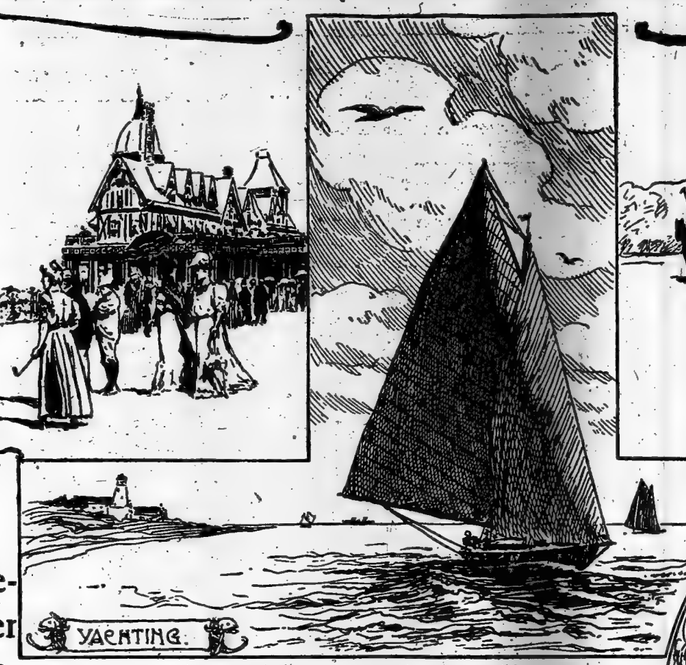
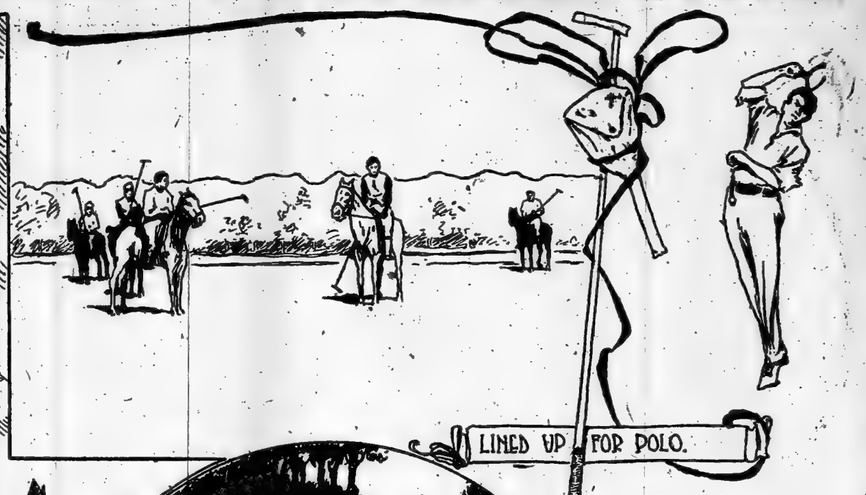
Reawakening of Country Club Life Around New York

OPENING THE GOLF SEASON AT ARDSLEY.



YACHTING.



LINED UP FOR POLO.

THE AUTOMOBILE CLUB TOURING.

Past Few Years Have Witnessed a Remarkable Increase in the Number of Country Clubs--Growing Popularity of Golf Has Done Much to Bring City Folk Closer to Nature.

MAY 1 has lost its characteristic flavor as moving day in the city, but it has gained something infinitely better, in that it marks the opening up of country life and country club sports. True, it is hard to set an exact time for this annual return to the enjoyments of nature, for old conditions have been so radically reversed that the question to-day is not so much that of going to the country as of coming to the city for a brief Winter's stay.

People leave town earlier than they used to and stay later. That attractive combination of cottage and club life established so successfully at Tuxedo and Weschester may now be seen in scores of localities within easy reaching distance by rail, automobile or trolley, from New York. The methods may be slightly different, but the results are practically the same, an enlargement of social, sporting and recreative life.

But notwithstanding the fact that many out of town clubs now keep open house all the year round and that hundreds of former city residents remain loyal to nature Winter and Summer, the month of May is really the opening of energetic country club life. Squash, racquets and indoor tennis, that have contributed to the enjoyment of the Tuxedo, Lakewood, Ardsley, Baltusrol, and other suburban club colonies, give way to the greater freedom of lawn tennis, the vigorous swinging of golf clubs over verdant greens, automobile touring over roads free from snow and vexatious mud holes, while those who go in for hunting and the more expensive luxuries of polo and road coaching prepare for a vigorous campaign.

Country life has been almost revolutionized within the last ten years. Where once one club was found there are now ten or twenty. Golf, of course, has given a wonderful impetus to the development of country club activity, and while the tournament fever is not so much in evidence as in the early days of the game, there are probably more persons playing to-day than ever before in America. Club committees of all kinds have been busy within the last two or three weeks arranging schedules of events for the year. They present a bewildering variety, for to so great an extent has the country club idea grown that it is possible to find every popular sport flourishing within the immediate vicinity of New York. In fact, if anything worth playing has been omitted, all that is necessary to secure its adoption by any of the big clubs is for a party of half a dozen advocates to get together and demand that it be added to the club's attractions. In this way the old-fashioned game of bowls has been established on the lawns of several country clubs. Archery also has gained favor in certain quarters, but at present this is more of a country home attraction than a club feature.

The growing delights of automobiling, the grand sport of polo, the royal and ancient game of golf, lawn tennis, boating, yachting, in which must be included motor boating, all leap into active existence in May. From the present date until May 30, which, owing to its holiday features, is for many sports the great opening day of the year, the varied interests of country club activity will multiply rapidly.

Polo has already begun at Van Cortlandt Park, where the members of Squadron A practice, and on May 20 the first match game will be played. Some of the best clubs in the United States have journeyed to Van Cortlandt to meet the military troopers, and it is a great credit to the excellence of this public field that the Polo Association chose it for the National championship meeting next Fall. Polo is a more expensive sport than many of the other amusements that the man of modest means may enjoy at his favorite club in New Jersey or Long Island. Nevertheless there have never been so many young polo players as within the last two or three years. In the vicinity of New York there are eleven flourishing polo clubs. Westchester, Meadow Brook, and Rockaway were among the pioneers, and the recent additions are Great Neck, Rumson, Somerset at Bernardsville, Lakewood, Whippany River at Morristown, Staten Island, and the Squadron A team, while Essex County, one of the original clubs, is about to revive the game on its old field. Tuxedo was once a great polo centre, but the game has languished there, and tennis, golf, fishing, and Winter amusements supply the chief sporting attractions for the Tuxedo colony.

The natural facilities of Long Island for open-air amusements have made it the popular pleasure and sporting resort for years. New Jersey, however, within recent years has been pushing that long sandy stretch of land hard for leading suburban honors. In the upper part of the city, on the edge of Westchester County and just over the border line, there has also been a great awakening of country life. Every little bay and harbor on the north shore of the Sound as far as New Haven possesses its yacht club, while counterparts are to be found in all the bays on the north shore of Long Island. The Long Island Yacht Racing Association has brought most of these clubs into a single organization, which has fostered the sport of inter-club racing and encouraged the building of one-design boats that have really been the life of many of the smaller clubs.

And now the pleasures of motor boating are being added. Those who do not care for the lightly built and expensive racing boats may be found cruising from bay to bay and from club to club in the less costly but infinitely more comfortable motor boats of moderate horse power. Just as golf opened up the means of healthful open-air exercise at a moderate price for thousands of office workers, so has motor boating furnished the opportunity of indulging in a mild form of yachting at a cost that will never cause the owner of his leather cushioned, four horse power boat to be dubbed as a plutocrat.

It is safe to say that the athletic girl of to-day owes most of her prestige to golf. With the exception of women's tennis tournaments and the occasional sight of a woman riding to hounds over the Hempstead plains, the fair sex a few years ago had little opportunity of participating in healthful sports. To-day the mixed foursome in golf vies in popularity with the mixed doubles in tennis. Women's teams visit neighboring clubs, playing team contests, and not content with this, the fair golfers of New York, Philadelphia, and Boston compete every year in a series of inter-city matches for a valuable silver cup presented by Clement A. Griscom of Philadelphia.

The number of golf clubs within the vicinity of New York easily surpasses that of all other clubs devoted to particular objects. Indeed, a golf course has become so much of a necessity that it is difficult to find a club that does not possess one, even though containing no more than nine holes. Again, many golf clubs have gradually expanded into complete country clubs. Some of the most notable examples of this sort are the Ardsley Club, the Country Club of Lakewood, the Nassau Country Club, the Morris County Country Club, Baltusrol, and Knollwood.

The Ardsley Club is now one of the show places along the Hudson River. It was started by many of the wealthy residents of Tarrytown, Irvington, Dobbs Ferry, and Hastings. It has been for several years the terminus of the Pioneer road coach during its runs from the Holland House. One of the famous old residences near the club, Ardsley Towers, has been rented for the coaching season by Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Gwynne Vanderbilt. The roads in the vicinity invite driving and automobiling, while the private yacht quarters accommodate during the Summer many palatial steam and sailing yachts. The golf course has few rivals in the country, while tennis is always popular. The Ardsley golf women have been among the most energetic in the metropolitan district. The women's championship has been held there, and Ardsley was also the scene of the first intercollegiate golf championship. The natural beauties of Ardsley add a peculiar charm to the place, and, as a club that upholds the best traditions of a social and sporting country club, Ardsley ranks among the leaders.

The Country Club of Lakewood was originally started as a golf club. Now, through George Gould's interest in the place, Lakewood has become a great horse centre. The Monmouth County Hunt meets there, polo is one of the annual attractions on the Georgian Court fields, while the open-air horse show on the grounds of the Country Club is the first of the long series of similar events in the local district. At Morristown golf again was the precursor of more ambitious sports. The women of Madison and Morristown really organized the Morris County Golf Club in 1895. Seven holes and a few acres of land marked the beginnings of what is now one of the longest and best eighteen-hole courses in the country. Both the men's and women's championships have been held there, and the women will meet there again next October.

The Whippany River Country Club, organized a year ago and occupying Eugene Higgins's old estate, has added polo, pony races, and squash to the list of sporting attractions. This season the club is to put its first road coach on the road. The first run will be this week, and for about five weeks daily trips will be made between Morristown and Bernardsville. The latter place is the home of the Somerset Country Club, also a great polo and golf headquarters. In its conditions of life Bernardsville is a local edition of Lenox, for it is filled with magnificent country homes, and the social life is of the best. In fact, Bernardsville, Madison, and Morristown form a distinct colony, and there is a delightful harmony of interests in everything that contributes to the life of the region.

The Baltusrol Club is near by, at Short Hills. Formed on a less pretentious plan, the club has been a success from the start. Hundreds of New York business men make it their headquarters during the Summer, and Saturdays and Sundays its links are fairly thronged with players. The Baltusrol Club is an excellent example of the typical American country club, run not on a cheap but on a moderate basis. The club house is plain but possesses everything that one needs to spend two or three nights, if need be, at the club. It has over 600 members and a long waiting list. Montclair, Englewood, North Jersey at Paterson, the Yountakah Country Club at Nutley, Dyker Meadow at Brooklyn, Oakland at Bayside, L. I., and other suburban clubs are practically of the same type. The game of golf started them all, and it is still keeping them alive.

Staten Island is a popular club centre, and for years the cricketers in the vicinity of the city have made it their headquarters. Cricket, however, is played to a large extent in Prospect Park during the Summer, while the Bay Ridge grounds of the Crescent Athletic Club are a great rallying spot for the cricket men and the limited coterie of lacrosse players. Some of the best local lacrosse games are seen every year at the Crescent A. C. grounds. The club is one of the most complete country clubs near the city, for being situated close to the water, boating and bathing have always been its popular pastimes. The Marine and Field Club at Bath Beach is another great boating centre.

It would be impossible to specify all of the leading clubs that draw their membership from the workers and partial residents, at least, of the city. Many have their well defined individualities, as polo and hunting at Meadow Brook, polo at Rockaway, shooting and minor sports at Westchester, tennis at Tuxedo and Southampton, fishing at the Southside Sportsmen's Club, L. I., and yachting at the clubs on the Sound and the Hudson River. Brief mention, however, should be made of the wide use of the public parks of the city by the seekers for open-air exercise. Van Cortlandt Park and the Pelham Bay Park are now, in most respects thoroughly up-to-date country clubs, furnishing opportunities for golf, polo, athletics, baseball, tennis, and other enjoyments at no cost, and yet with facilities as good as will be found in many of the smaller private clubs. Go to Van Cortlandt Park any Saturday afternoon during the season that golf is in its prime, and no better illustration of the growth of country life and the desire to get out into the open for exercise and sport will be needed. The army of golfers waiting to drive off, sometimes numbering from 200 to 300, with fresh additions constantly swelling the number, testifies to the fascination that this novel Scotch game exerts for all classes of persons. The women are almost as numerous as the men. There is an independence, a social enjoyment and a good nature about it all that are delightful to see. Not only are the older players kept younger, but those younger in years are laying up a splendid heritage of future health by a proper amount of attention and allegiance to the open air enjoyment country life affords.

Having done so, he bethought him again of Margarete Schwan, and wrote to her father, asking for her in due form. Nothing came of that, either. How Margarete felt about it does not appear. In 1785, induced by his good and well-to-do friend, Gottfried Körner, Schiller went to Leipsic. As usual in his friendships Schiller was all enthusiasm, and spent many glowing words upon Körner. Körner, on his part, provided the poet with cash, stood by him, and steadied him loyally. Later, living with Körner and Körner's wife at Dresden, Schiller had another romance. He met at a mask ball a certain Henriette von Arnim, represented as a fine rich figure of a girl who was counted a siren, and had upon her string also a Jewish banker and a Count named Waldstein. Schiller was crushed when he discovered that when he was not attending upon Henriette one of these gentlemen always was. He plucked the poisoned passion from his heart not without much pain.

These amorous matters, writing his Spanish play "Don Carlos," and the editing of a paper called Thalia, bring him to July, 1787, when he went for the first time to Weimar, where his ancient flame, the Baroness von Kalb, received him with open arms and presented him with pride to Weimar society—Schiller taking these attentions most kindly. Weimar society, by the way, lacked at that moment its chief claim to consideration—Goethe. It was at Rudolstadt, near by, that the shy poet met his fate at last. She was Lotte von Lengefeld, a girl of twenty-one at the time, and she made a whole Summer happy for Schiller. From Jena, where he was now professor, (unsalaried,) he wrote her very tender letters, addressed jointly to her name. Schiller's married life, spent chiefly at Jena and Weimar, was a very happy one, save in so far as his ill-health presently marred it.

It was at the house of the Lengefelds that Schiller first met Goethe—but in the beginning the author of "The Sorrows of Werther" and the dramatist of "The Robbers" did not take to each other. Hermann Grimm finally brought the two together at Jena in 1794, and for the remaining ten years of Schiller's life he and Goethe were fast friends and allies. These of course were Schiller's great years—the years of the Horen, (Schiller's periodical to which all the great literary men of Germany contributed,) of the Xenia, in which he and Goethe made war with quips and cracks (more or less pointed and malicious) upon the Philistines of the Fatherland, the years of Schiller's connection with the Weimar Theatre, of "Wallenstein," (1799,) Maria Stuart," (1800,) "The Maid of Orleans," (1801,) of "The Bride of Messina," (1803, the year in which the Chancellery of the Holy Roman Empire gave him a patent of nobility,) and of "William Tell," (1804.) This story has nothing to do with criticism, as has been said before, but "Tell," like "The Robbers," was inspired by the poet's passion for freedom, and has been taken by the Germans as the highest expression of German patriotism. Every schoolboy knows how the Swiss archer (according to Tschudi) was bid by the cruel tyrant Gessler, viceregent of the House of Austria, to shoot (upon pain of death for both of them) an apple which rested upon the head of his little son.

Every schoolboy has read how Tell shot the apple and then slew the tyrant. Schiller merely made a play of that old "Maria Stuart" has for heroine Mary Queen of Scots—inspiration of so many from Sir Walter to Andrew Lang and Maurice Hewlett in our own time. Mr. Calvin Thomas, already so often quoted, calls this play "a canonization and a caricature." Mary of course is canonized, though after all she is but an earthy saint; Elizabeth is the caricature. As for "The Maid of Orleans"—most appealing figure of all, Schiller has in her case taken even greater liberties with history. In his play, as you may remember, brave Joan dies gloriously in battle and not shamefully (though even more gloriously) at the stake. Schiller's scheme of poetic justice could not suffer a death of that kind—perhaps he no more dared the consummation of such a thing upon the stage than Sardou in "The Sorceress," which Mrs. Patrick Campbell was playing last Winter, or Mr. Justin Huntly McCarthy in that "Proud Prince" of his, in which Mr. Sothern and Cecilia Loftus figured two years ago. "The Bride of Messina" is a play with a chorus after the classic fashion, and chiefly interesting to admirers of the Greeks. We need not talk here about his ballads.

There was much else that Schiller did—for a time he was Professor of History at Jena, and he wrote "The Defection of the Netherlands" and "The Thirty Years' War," the last a "serial" history for The Historical Calendar for Ladies, a sort of Ladies' Home Journal of those times, though it was an annual and not a monthly. For all that it seems a strangely modern thing for a poet to be doing, and most proper to be remembered of that Schiller who is the best-beloved poet of the whole German people. His studies in philosophy are not important to the unstudious reader, however speare than the English themselves. That, of course, is not all.

Schiller made French plays over as our modern play carpenters do, and even anticipated Mr. Mansfield in a drama of "Ivan the Terrible," though Schiller's hero was not Ivan himself, but a pretended son of that monster, Dmitri of Demetrius. It may be added that of all German writers Schiller is most quoted by his countrymen—butchers and bakers and candlestick makers have tags of his at their tongues' tip. Only Goethe's "Faust" comes in for so much quoting, and that not so general. People recite Schiller's poems everywhere, and parodies of them are more numerous than the uncounted sands by the sea. The most parodied poet of a nation may fairly be assumed to be the most popular.

CONRIED ON SCHILLER.

DIRECTOR HEINRICH CONRIED, sitting in his well-guarded gleaming mahogany-furnished office at the Metropolitan Opera House, and interrupted once a minute at least by a ring at one of the half dozen 'phones that swing at his left elbow, was talking about Schiller from the actor's point of view. Just over Mr. Conried's head hung imposing documents in frames. One began, "We, William, by the grace of God King of Prussia"; another was in the name of Vittorio Emmanuele, King of Italy, and made Mr. Conried a knight.

"If you ask me of Schiller's effect upon the actors," said Mr. Conried, "then I can speak. It is that every part in each Schiller drama carries of itself—leading man, leading woman, villain, comedian, player of a character part—each of them rides upon the mighty swell of the dramatic power of the part itself so that each performer becomes almost in spite of himself great. With Schiller there are no unthankful parts."

Here Mr. Conried lent his ear for a while to the 'phone, and spoke mysteriously to the man at the other end of signing a check for $150,000. So trivial an incident did not detain him or switch the current of his talk. He resumed:

"Karl Moor and Franz Moor in 'The Robbers' have been from the beginning the delight of the actors. No man, unless he is an absolute ass, can make a bad part of either. If he is no actor, and will only speak his lines properly, the lines themselves will tell, and the public will enjoy at least the language; if he is an actor, the dramatic force of the lines will strengthen him and make him a better actor. You would think that Schiller himself must have been a good actor—which he was not—in order to have such feeling for dramatic situations. So strong this sense is that even in 'Cabal and Love'—a play like that, absolutely out of date as to its motives—the power to move remains yet. If 'Cabal and Love' is put on now you will find no German audience which will not enjoy it and cheer it."

Another interruption from the 'phone and Mr. Conried continued:

"I have played Franz Moor since the beginning of my career as an actor. I have played in Berlin, Leipsic, Berne, New York, and always everywhere the house was sold out. Franz is the great stage villain. There have been stage villains since Franz, but there has been no stage villain which gives the actor such advantages and the people such satisfaction. Therefore, everywhere, both in Germany and out of Germany, whenever the manager of a small German theatre wants to put on something which is classic and which at the same time will fill the play in Berlin, now thirty years ago, I could not get from the stage carpenter enough rocks for the conspirators' scene in the Rütli. I had rocks and still more rocks, rocks behind and before and rocks overhanging—as Schiller described the place. When I came to the Rütli afterward I found no rocks—no rocks in sight for a great space—though the ruggedness of the mountains lay beyond. Yet Schiller's Rütli produces not less its powerful effect upon the stage for not being Rütli at all—nor his 'Tell' less effect because there was no apple shooting nor his 'Maria Stuart' because the real Mary was quite different."

Again buzzing of bells and other disjointed talk at long range. Then Mr. Conried spoke of the especial interest in William Tell in this country, because all the children who are learning German at hard labor read it in the schools. He admitted that under such circumstances Tell might be a bore. Most of us remember well enough that it was. The German teachers, also, said Mr. Conried, complained of lack of interest in Tell and the others.

"Therefore," he added, "I have since four years now agreed with the teachers that if they will say to me which plays they will read I will give at my Irving Place Theatre those plays after the children have read them—four each year. I have them at 10 o'clock in the morning on Saturdays, and charge to the children a nominal admission fee of 25 cents. This year the four plays—the last was given on the 29th of April—were 'William Tell,' 'Maria Stuart,' 'Don Carlos,' and 'Minna von Barnhelm,' three of them, as you see, Schiller's, one Lessing's."

Then Mr. Conried spoke of Schiller's poems, which are not in form dramatic—

THE CELEBRATION IN NEW YORK.

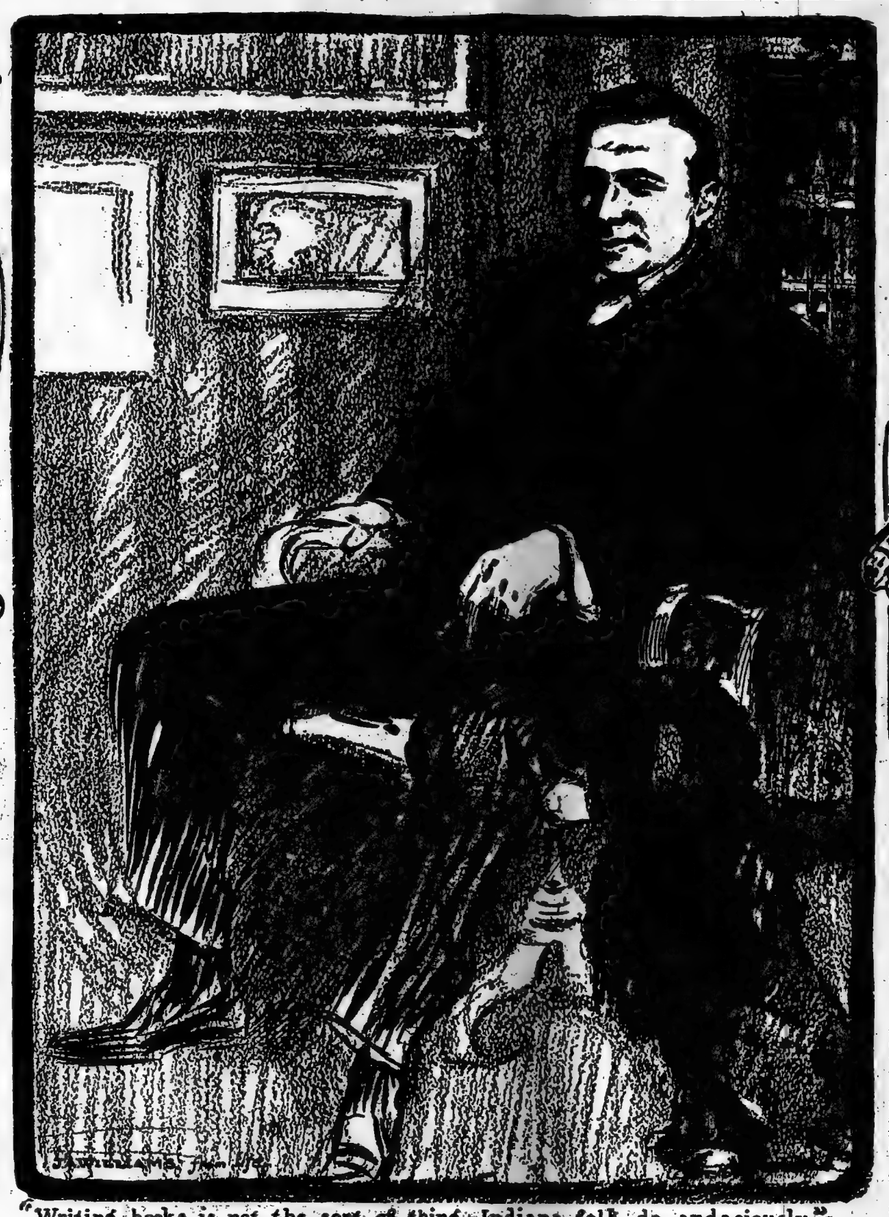
THE Schiller commemorative celebrations in New York begin with a grand concert at Carnegie Hall this evening—this concert under the auspices of the United German Singing Societies, with Carl Hein as director. Upon this occasion, also, Mayor McClellan will speak, and further addresses will be delivered by George van Skal and the Rev. Albert W. Hilerbrandt. To-morrow night all the German societies in the city will join in a torchlight procession, and on Tuesday night will occur the celebration at Columbia University, at which Carl Schurz will preside.

At the concert to-night the programme is made up entirely of works of Schiller which have been set to music. Romberg's "The Lay of the Bell" is to be presented by a chorus of 800 voices and an orchestra of 60, assisted by Mrs. Corinne Kelsey, soprano; Mrs. Paula Woehning, contralto; Mr. William H. Rieger, tenor; John Boice, basso, and Emil Fischer, basso. In addition, there is to be chorus singing a cappella by the Schillerbund, Elchenkrans Society, Schwaebischer Saengerbund, Mozart Verein, Frans Schubert Maennerchor, Kreutzer Quartet Club, Rheinpfaelzer Maennerchor, and the Arion Liedertafel.

THE CENTENNIAL IN GERMANY.

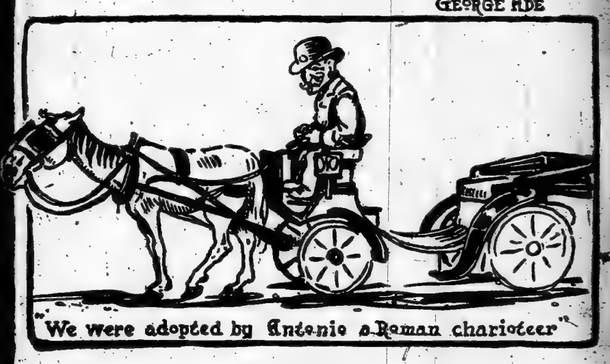
IN Germany, naturally, the week is to be very thoroughly Schiller week. There the "best beloved poet" will be celebrated with German warmth and heartiness. Notably and with the official stamp of the Empire in Berlin, classically

Booth Tarkington and the Indiana Literary Bacillus



"Writing books is not the sort of thing Indiana folk do audaciously."

JOHN McCUTCHEON — GEORGE ADE



"We were adopted by Antonio a Roman charioteer"

Blames Lew Wallace and James Whitcomb Riley for the Epidemic in Hoosierdom -- How "Monsieur Beaucaire" Was Written Around a Picture--A Good Story About the Family Coachman.

STRANGE as it may sound to the cultivated ears of Boston, according to vital statistics the State of Indiana has produced more litterateurs than any other State in the Union. This suggests a scientific process of literary propagation, but there is no precedent of heredity showing a domestic system that could guarantee a direct and successive parentage of literature.

People who write just happen to do so, and in Indiana parents seemed to have been more neglectful of pre-natal insight than in some other States. Hence an unusual number of Indiana children, who grew up with an indefinite carelessness that left them exposed in their maturity to a contagion of literature.

This kind of reasoning was not entirely conclusive, although the statistics that aroused it were, so I sought the aid of an Indiana novelist, Booth Tarkington.

"Mr. Tarkington," I said ponderously, "why has the State of Indiana cornered the literary bacilli of the United States?"

"I think it was all on account of those two fellows, Wallace and Riley," said Tarkington, with some hesitation, for he realized that the charge against his native State was a serious one.

"You see, I don't believe that this thing was done openly," he continued, haltingly. "Writing books is not the sort of thing the folks in Indiana do audaciously."

There was distinct humility in his tone and manner, and almost an appeal for sympathy in what he next said.

"I am sure it was the fault of those chaps, Wallace and Riley. We saw them writing pieces they got money for, and a lot of us felt we could do the same thing. It looked easy, and a lot of us tried; but if our intentions were not wholly worthy there were certain heroic conditions in our literary efforts. Think of the deep-rooted, inexorable prejudice against a young man who announces his intention to write for a living. His friends grin at him as if he had decided to build an airship. What man ever frankly confided his decision to write a novel to people who knew him well without losing his personal dignity and their affectionate esteem? Then, again, look at the blight a young man puts on his public standing if he decides to write a book. If he is a lawyer his career as a jury pleader is at an end, for the opposing counsel has only to say suavely to the jury: 'Gentlemen, my opponent is a poet—he has written a book,' and that jury would never believe him again under oath. Even to-day it takes a crowd that is gathered together in secret under the bond of a treasured password to treat a live poet with a half-way decent respect, and as to the novelist, a lot of people don't care anything about him; I have even known of some who were disliked. No, no, no, do not imagine that Indiana secured her literary supremacy without much shedding of heart's blood, to say nothing of copying ink."

Stirring as all this was, with much subtle art of pathos worked into it deftly here and there, the wonder in it was that there were so many brave hearts and loyal hands in Indiana toiling in the cause of literature.

"It is really wonderful how a man ever writes a book of a hundred thousand words," said Tarkington, "isn't it?"

"Why does he?" I asked.

"Because he is fond of ease and culture and a life of luxurious idleness, I suppose. Have one of these imported cigarettes?"

We lighted them, leaned back in the velvet elegancies of a Riverside Drive studio, and almost forgot Indiana in this atmosphere of literary excellence in New York.

And yet New York had never really had a literary excellence of its own.

"I met a man who was born in New York," said Tarkington, "who said he had just discovered another man also born here, and the two intended to meet soon and hold a reunion of New Yorkers who were actually born in New York."

Even in Indiana they knew that we were only a metropolis after all.

In fact, Indiana had all but literally molded the modern expressiveness of the New Yorker, thanks to George Ade. What man who lived in New York would ever be tripped up by Manhattan cocktails without thinking of the "cold gray dawn of the morning after," and what alumni society will fail to regain its youth in the humor of "The College Widow"?

Booth Tarkington, after those two pioneers, James Whitcomb Riley and the late Gen. Lew Wallace, represented the best literary instincts of Indiana, which means among the best of the American authors. He had written the "Gentleman from Indiana," and "Monsieur Beaucaire," the latter a little gem, a modern classic. Perhaps that word classic in this case is scarcely practical, the range of vision that it requires being too close, but the polish and style of this story must be admitted, and yet its inception as told by the author was singularly hazardous, Western in the modesty of its beginning.

At one time Booth Tarkington thought he would be an illustrator. He was chief cartoonist and head of the art department of a little magazine that failed for want of a vulgarity it scorned—sufficient capital.

"I had been doing some pictures for the little book, as a matter of friendship more than anything else, and when the magazine failed I still had two or three sketches left over. One of these I picked up one night on my desk. It represented a little man in a peruque, sitting disconsolately at a table, while in front of him stood a big tall man in a uniform on. I concluded was English. The little man looked to me like a Frenchman, and the other one was big enough to be a Duke. So I began to write around the sketch, and the result was 'Monsieur Beaucaire.'"

At that time Booth Tarkington had not been to Europe.

"Rather a brave thing, wasn't it, to write about Bath, when I had never been there?" he said hesitatingly; "but I got the habit of writing something around sketches when I was trying my luck as an illustrator. It adds to the revenue. For instance, I once sent a sketch to Life, and received a check with an itemized account allowing me $13 for the picture and $7 for the text. I calculated that it took me an hour and a half to turn the work out, and figuring my time at this ratio per day, I concluded I had a nice little income assured. So I finished up a batch of thirteen sketches with text and sent them to Life. They all came back, and I saw that I had miscalculated."

"Then you turned to writing?"

"Well, I went into the Legislature of my own State, and got into a political fight which ended in typhoid fever for me. Our side was opposed to the Governor, and of course he retaliated by vetoing our bills, but still I think he knew the fight was on. I enjoyed politics. People are so much more interesting than books. I fancy that people live too much in imitation of the figures in fiction and in plays, and not enough in themselves. Bernard Shaw is digging that idea out in his work; he shows us how people think they have emotions, and then discover that they are only imitating the emotions they have read about in books or seen in plays."

"The influence of the novel is harmful?"

"Well, that is rather a big subject," said Tarkington, wisely remembering an intuitive loyalty to publishers.

"I wonder what influence literature has on the janitor?" he mused, dryly.

"Do janitors read?" I asked.

It was very interesting, this idea, for perhaps one might trace the inhumanity of janitors to a coarse and brutal literature, and if so, a new appeal to philanthropy should be made for the establishing of a library of selected books for janitors only.

"They must read the newspapers, and they at least are a series of short stories, a composite mixture of fiction," said Tarkington.

"In that case, supposing the janitors read only sensational newspapers, what becomes of them?"

He grew serious, and a sad pause followed in which "Gamir," a black poodle, by nature a clown, came tumbling in upon us and made us forget the destiny of janitors and the literature that is made for them. He's born funny!" said his master, as he made him jump and stand on his head.

"From Indiana?"

"No, he's a Frenchman. They are always full of mischief."

"Like George Ade and McCutcheon," I said.

"You can't suppress those two. I remember when they were working on a Chicago newspaper together they used to make trips to their home town, and whenever they came the whole town was agog and excited. They made everybody enjoy life while they were there, and when the time came for them to return to Chicago the town went into a sort of embryo mourning."

McCutcheon's cartoons of "Bird Centre," are well known.

"'Bird Centre' was dramatized," I said quietly.

"Yes, and McCutcheon took passage for Japan to escape seeing the play," said Tarkington, also quietly.

In Indiana literature made men neither too proud nor too serious; for some it was a good job, and that's all.

It was not anything to talk about.

Booth Tarkington looks like the college man he is, young, normal, and full of a humor that scarcely veils the finer artistic sympathies and taste for quality that abides.

His studio was full of artistic milestones in his career. Pictures of Italian gardens, bronzes chosen for the excellence of their modeling and the power of their life presentment, a Roman basin, chairs of the Norse period, a flavor of Louis Quinze, books, old prints, and grinning, wide-mouthed, sneering masks.

"Most of these things have been picked up in Europe," he said. "We lived some time in Rome, and among things we acquired in a strange way but could not bring to America was an Italian dog, an unclassified thing I bought in the streets, and a family coachman."

The story of this family coachman, as told in his own words, as nearly as I can remember, is as typical of American humor as anything these Indiana writers have conceived.

"This is how it came about that we have a family coachman in Rome who awaits our return, and whose name is Antonio," said Tarkington.

"One day we saw a crowd of Italians gathered around a horse that was lying prostrate in the middle of the street. Four or five men had hold of him by the tail, and amid vociferous yells and shouts were pulling him about, apparently with the intention of urging him to stand up. I saw that the horse was barely alive and sent for a bowl of hot wine and castor oil, which through some remote recollection of veterinary knowledge came to me as a suitable prescription. They brought the dose and tried to pour it into the horse's mouth crosswise. Finally I got the poor beast's head propped up so that the medicine could be swallowed, when the horse gave a loud gasp, rolled its eyes, and stiffened out. I supposed it was dead, and, giving the man a gold piece, sneaked away, with the uneasy conscience of a doctor who had made a false diagnosis.

"When we came back, what was our surprise to be told that the horse was alive and standing there on its four shaky legs, complete except for a shortened tail, harnessed to the most disreputable and moth-eaten cab in Rome. It was Antonio who amiliigly informed us that his horse and his cab were at our disposal for the rest of our lives. How we tried to dodge that cab, to evade Antonio would make a long story, but it was of no use. One day Antonio was waiting as usual outside our door. He would come at 5 in the morning, although we never got up so early, and wait. It was cold, Antonio had no overcoat, and was shivering. I said to him:

"'Antonio, go and buy an overcoat, you will freeze to death.'

"With chattering teeth he replied gallantly: 'No, no, Signor, I am not cold, while my heart is warm to be the signor's family coachman!'

"Whenever we had a hill to climb we were obliged to get out and walk, because the horse would have died again if we didn't. Once he managed to drag us over a mound, when Antonio looked round and said with a beaming smile: 'Le pauvre marche bien maintenant n'est ce pas?'

"Well, no other cabman ever chose to get near us while we were in Rome, and we were doomed to the most disreputable rig in the town. We left the Italian mongrel in Antonio's care, and he writes to us constantly, as a family coachman should, about the condition of the dog, and incidentally of an item of expense, which was involved by an Italian law that requires the constant relicensing of dogs there. He just sent him another check yesterday for about the fifteenth dog license this year.

First Thought for Her Hat.

MRS. WINIFRED E. COMMELINE, wife of Lieut. Col. C. E. Commeline, commanding the Royal Engineers in Bermuda, who has been visiting in New York, was the heroine a couple of years ago of an adventure that is still remembered in garrison circles at the British port of Plymouth.

Mrs. Commeline was driving a dogcart near the town, when the Border Regiment, under command of Lieut. Col. G. H. Ovens, came swinging along to the strains of a lively march. As the band approached the horse took fright and bolted down a crossroad, while the groom was hurled from his seat. Mrs. Commeline planted her little feet firmly against the dashboard and pulled with all her might, but the frantic animal tore on at full speed down the long, straight country lane.

The drivers of a couple of drays moving in opposite directions tried to make way by drawing their vehicles one to the left and the other to the right. Mrs. Commerline managed to steer the runaway through the narrow passage, but both wheels of the dogcart were torn off. The jolt nearly pitched her out. She recovered her seat, however, and held firmly to the reins, though her arms were nearly pulled from their sockets by the strain to which they were being subjected as the vehicle went bumping and bounding over the road.

Meanwhile the regiment had broken ranks and started in wild pursuit. Bandsmen who had dropped their instruments, privates with and without rifles, and officers, mounted and on foot, were streaming over the fields, jumping ditches, breaking through hedges, and vaulting walls in the hope of heading off and stopping the runaway. At last the road took an upward turn, and the horse becoming exhausted, Mrs. Commeline was able to regain control of him and bring him to

The Magellanic Cloud and Its Newly Discovered Variable Stars

"Regions of lucid matter taking forms,
Brushes of fire, hazy gleams,
Clusters and beds of worlds and beelike swarms
Of suns and starry streams."—Tennyson.

AFTER a careful examination of sixteen excellent photographs of the Southern skies taken at Arequipa last Autumn, Miss Leavitt of the Harvard College Observatory discovered 843 new variable stars in the small Magellanic Cloud. This is a remarkable cloudlike object near the Southern Pole, and it is in the constellation Toucan, between the South Pole and the bright star Achernar in Eridanus. The greater cloud usually referred to as Nubecula Major is situated in the constellation Dorado, and covers an area of about 42 square degrees, or over 200 times the apparent size of the full moon. The smaller cloud, or Nebecula Minor, covers an area of only 10 square degrees, or about fifty times the apparent size of the full moon.

The Magellanic Clouds are so called because they were first observed by Magellan. Situated, as they are, in a region of the sky remarkably destitute of stars, they attract considerable attention and are among the most picturesque objects in the southern heavens. They are somewhat oval in shape, and can be seen with the unaided eye, but in the light of the full moon the small cloud becomes invisible. These clouds are not portions of the Milky Way, nor are they connected with each other. They might be termed celestial islands in the depths of space. Such vacancies recall Sir William Herschel's apt simile, "windows of heaven," through which we gain a glimpse of the hidden depths beyond. Yet despite the Glitter like a swarm of fireflies, tangled in a silver braid.

Each star is a mighty sun like our own, and many probably far surpass him in splendor—fiery orbs aglow with energy and pouring forth each moment supplies of light and heat to families of circling worlds; stars of all orders of brightness, from the leading glories of the firmament to tiny points of light-revealing stars so far distant as to be barely discernible:

How distant some of these nocturnal suns!
So distant (says the sage) 'twere not absurd
To doubt, if beams set out at Nature's birth,
Are yet arrived at this so foreign world,
Though nothing half so rapid as their flight.

Nor are varieties of color wanting to render the display more beautiful, for not only does "one star differ from another star in glory," but in color as well. Some are white, others yellow, orange, red, green, blue, and purple, and all these tints are represented in the Magellanic Clouds. Many of the stars are grouped in graceful clusters, as though drawn together by the irresistible power of attraction. Elsewhere they are arranged in streams and rows, in coronets and festoons interwoven with a delicate tracery of nebulous star-mist clinging around them. Thus they in descrying a boundary. Space appears to us infinite and beyond the grasp of our mental capacity."

Nevertheless, photography has enabled us to learn many interesting facts concerning the heavens, which might otherwise have remained forever unknown. By its means, for instance, we know that the Magellanic Clouds are composed of swarms of stars, clusters, and nebulae of every description. There, indeed, are "regions of lucid matter taking forms," thousands of stars glittering in vast beds of glowing gas, the star dust from which scientists believe all the suns and worlds of space were originally made. Many of the stars are grouped in graceful clusters, as though drawn together by the irresistible power of attraction. Elsewhere they are arranged in streams and rows, in coronets and festoons interwoven with a delicate tracery of nebulous star-mist clinging around them. Thus they there are, the scene presented to the inhabitants of such planets must be one of marvelous splendor. Red, orange, and yellow stars from the most charming contrast to the blue, green, and purple stars near which they are commonly seen. Suns must be always rising and always setting, only the magnificent colors which adorn our skies at sunrise and sunset must be lacking, banished by the excess of splendor. "Imagination fails to conceive," says Sir John Herschel, "the charming contrast and grateful vicissitudes of a red and green day, alternating with light or with darkness, in the planetary systems belonging to these suns." So accustomed are we to the white light received from our own bright particular star that were it suddenly to glow with a green or ruddy hue we would be overcome with amazement.

Most fascinating and mysterious of problems concerning the wonders of the heavens is the detection of variable stars, not only in isolated cases as that of the 300 stars which show this marked peculiarity, but in certain clusters of stars which contain an extraordinary proportion of variables. We find among the stars every degree of change, from the so-called new stars, which suddenly blaze forth in glory, while others are gradually growing fainter or fading altogether from view.

But the variable stars detected in clusters show a marked regularity in the waxing and waning of their light. Several of these stars have been studied during more than a thousand, and one during more than five thousand periods, and the variations have been as regular as clockwork. Could we imagine a celestial lamplighter as it were carefully trimming the lamps of the heavens, we could not conceive of more regular work. Such is the case, the rule should hold yet more strongly among the stars of a condensed mass of stars, such as form the greater part of the Magellanic cloud.

No achievement of the human intellect is greater than the detection of invisible bodies revolving around the stars. If these bodies could be seen with a telescope there would be nothing very wonderful in finding them, but as they are absolutely dark, since they radiate no light of their own that the eye can perceive, they must remain forever invisible.

How, then, do we know that they exist, except by their disturbing influence on the stars around which they revolve, and which they cause to swing to and fro? However, the amount of swing is so slight that we have to measure it by means of the spectroscope. The light from a star travels across the ether which fills space in tiny waves, ten thousand to one hundred thousand being within a single inch. These wavelets travel at a rate that would encircle the earth seven times in a second. Each wave has a crest like the ocean waves, and the length of the wave is measured by the distance between the crests. It has been found that when a star is moving in our direction the waves of light are a little shorter than when the star is moving away from us. Thus, by measuring the length of the light waves which a star emits, it can be determined whether it is approaching or receding from the earth. For a few hours, or perhaps a few days, it may be moving toward us, then it will slacken its pace and move away. Thus it vibrates to and fro, though as a matter of fact the motion is more likely to be around and around in a circle. The plate must be gone over very carefully if any chance new stars are to be found. The most tedious part of the work, however, seems to be the examination of the spectrum of the different stars. Their peculiarities must be carefully noted, and in this way the keenly trained eyes of Miss Leavitt discovered that hundreds of variable stars were present in the region of the small Magellanic cloud.

Concerning the work at Harvard Observatory Prof. Newcomb says:

"In any general review of the progress of stellar astronomy during the past twenty years, we should find the Harvard Observatory before us at every turn. Not satisfied with the Northern Hemisphere, it has established a branch at Arequipa, Peru, in which its methods of observation and research are extended to the south celestial pole. Its principal specialty has been the continuous exploration of the heavens. For more than ten years it might almost be said that a sleepless watch of the heavens has been kept up by an all-seeing photographic eye, with an accuracy of which the world has hardly a conception."

MARY PROCTOR.

Who Lost a Wedding Ring?

A YOUNG man about to be married, especially if he has gone so far as to purchase the wedding ring, might naturally be supposed to keep it safe in the proverbial waistcoat pocket until the eventful moment when he slips it on the finger of his bride. Yet one day last week a young man somewhere in the town awoke to find the wedding ring that he had purchased only the day before missing. Had he been walking near the corner of the Post Office, near Mall Street, about 8 P. M., he might have seen a roughly dressed workingman suddenly stop and pick up, suspiciously, a small box, neatly wrapped in white tissue paper. A passerby saw the act. The workingman also noticed that his find had been discovered, and in the endeavor to appear wholly innocent in the matter, he called out:

"Hey, what do you think this is? I just picked it up back there on the curbstone."

It was suggested that he unwrap the package, and to the amazement of the finder the bright gleam of gold flashed before his eyes.

"Gee!" was his first exclamation. "I guess I got something here all right. Wonder if it'll fit me?" And the ring that probably had been selected with so much thoughtful care and with visions of the fair one whom it was hoped so soon would wear it, was pulled from its dainty box and thrust upon a much-begrimed finger. It barely went beyond the first knuckle.

"No, it won't do for me," was the disappointed exclamation, but then, in a brighter key, he added:

"Well, I'll keep it anyway, and I guess I can get $2 or $3 for it all right."

The ring was unmarked and no name of a jeweler appeared on the box.

The Uses of Evil.

"Say, ma wants two pounds of butter. She wants it just exactly like what you sent the day before yesterday, an' if it ain't that same kind she don't want any at all."

The small boy had bolted in, discharging himself abruptly of his errand, pausing now only for breath. But the grocer, taking down the order of a new customer, did not mind the interruption.

"Well, I'll keep it anyway, and I guess I can get $2 or $3 for it all right."

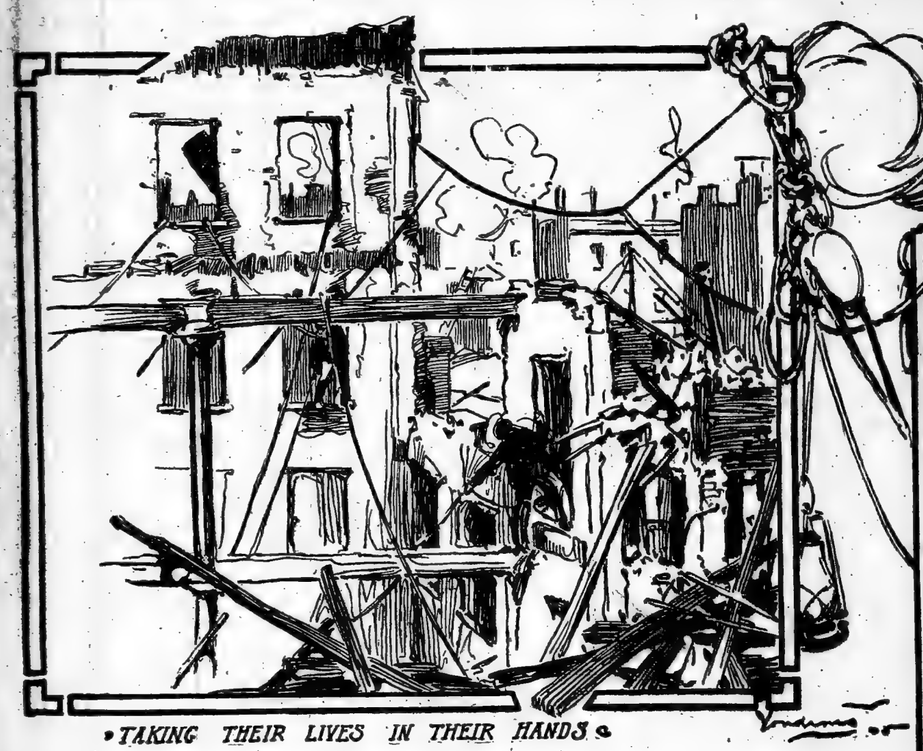
Fearless Fred Walker and the Perils of Wall Wrecking



TAKING THEIR LIVES IN THEIR HANDS

FRED WALKER

WALKER'S WRECKING GANG

THIS REQUIRES NERVE

Daredevil Spirit Required to Follow the Calling--Some of the Chances Men Will Take for $3 a Day--Must Have Cool Heads and Steady Nerves.

HEY there, Walker, don't you try that. It won't hold you. Do you hear? Come down out of that, I say."

Straddling the ragged top of a rickety eight-story wall, Fred Walker looked over at the speaker and grinned.

"It's all right, Jim," he cried. "It's safe all right." Nevertheless his foreman made him descend, which Walker did by sliding down from his precarious perch on a cable stretching from the top of the wall to the middle of the gutted building.

A few minutes later he was on the top of the adjoining roof joking with his fellow-members of the Emergency Wrecking Corps. Comparatively few persons, it would seem, know of this corps or the work it does, and that is a pity, because it comprises a crowd of men of an unusual type, whose duties compel them day after day to work within the very shadow of death, with no spectators to applaud their bravery, and with no reward or incentive other than their stipend of $3 a day or less. It is the business of this corps to pull down shaky walls.

It would pay the average citizen to visit the ruins of the recent fire at Grand and Orchard Streets and watch these men at their work. He would see much to thrill and excite him. He would see a number of fellows in brown overalls and blue shirts tempting death as though it were a laughing matter, and flouting possible injury as though it were something devoutly to be wished—and, above all, he would see that dare-devil Fred Walker walking along shaky, quivering walls with all the utter unconcern with which a man walks along a broad sidewalk; he would see him shooting about all sorts of dangerous places—up wall, down wall, along wall, hanging, ape-like, to ropes which must be insecurely fastened if only because of the structural weakness of the places to which they are attached. It is better than a circus, chiefly for the reason that the hair-raising feats of Walker and his fellows are applied to a practical purpose—and there are no nets below to break any possible falls. It is a wild, dirty, reckless calling, and one wonders that men have been found with sufficient hardihood to engage in it.

When the foreman called across to Walker to come off that wall, the young man—he is not thirty—was working his way along the top of a swaying mass of brick in order that he might make another cable fast to the extreme end. But the words of the foreman prevented the carrying out of this intention. And yet—so at least the observer thought—Walker had been doing so much that was risky and nerve-racking all morning as to render the foreman's last warning rather far-fetched. But, then, the foreman's duty, a part of it at least, is to see that his men do not get killed, and no doubt he knew what he was about.

This was on the walls left standing above the ruins of the recent sweatshop fire on Hester Street—they are working on the Orchard Street walls now. In Hester Street there were four walls and nothing else. The insides had been eaten out by the fire as cleanly as one picks a nut, and being without support, the walls were in consequence in imminent danger of falling. It is only when walls are adjudged unsafe that the emergency gang is called upon to take them down. If they remain standing after a fire and are pronounced safe, the owner of the building must act. But the Hester Street walls were a public menace, and so the emergency men came.

Naturally when a wall requires the attention of this gang it is likely to fall at any time. And so the risk begins the minute the men approach it. And if the walls are unsafe standing alone, how much more unsafe must they be when men clamber over them, passing cables through window openings, digging holes in the brick so that other cables may be passed through, and in general preparing the wall so that a long pull and a strong pull will bring it crumbling, roaring down?

That was what Walker was up to at the time his foreman interposed. All morning he and the gang of men had been at work making guy ropes fast and in other ways bracing those parts of the wall which they did not wish to have fall with the first section. This is always done; because if all of the wall comes down at once a great part of it is likely to "back out," falling on adjoining buildings and causing thousands of dollars damage and probable loss of life. Scientifically pulled, a wall falls inward.

It would be a disgrace for a foreman to have a wall "back" on him, and so, when he decides what section must come down at the first pull—say the upper three stories—he sets his men to guying up the lower stories so that all the pull will be exerted on the upper section.

All this involves days of work before any section of the wall is pulled at all. But the guying is so arranged that after the pulling begins each section may be made ready for the fall by slipping off the guy ropes that brace it.

A reporter was just in time to see Fred Walker making the ropes ready for the first haul. When he wished to go up or down, he used the guy ropes—scampering up hand-over-hand monkeywise, or twining his legs about the cable and slipping down like a meteor to the desired place. And never, in a circus or elsewhere, or in a nightmare, had the reporter seen anything more thrilling or creepy than the way Walker swung about that great white wall which at the time was swaying in the wind. Even his fellow steeplejacks on the adjoining roof watched him breathlessly.

"He ain't afraid of nothing," said one of the men. "We all of us have to go into pretty bad places, but there ain't none of us would take the risks Walker does. He doesn't care three cents for his life."

It seemed so to the reporter, whose breath came in quick gasps when that young man, his hand grasping an unstable spike in the cracked wall, swung himself over to an adjoining window sill, a span of at least seven feet. In the act he sent a charred mass of wood and brick and an iron fireproof door rattling to the bottom of the ruins, and why Walker did not go, too, was more than the reporter could tell. But he did not, and the men said he had done lots of things more hazardous than that.

And then a minute later, while seated on a window sill, supporting himself with one hand on the hauling rope running over his head, some one gave a signal and the gang gave the rope a hard pull. Ugh! Walker was jerked up in the air like a piece of rag, but he hung on, swinging in space for a second by one hand. Twisting sideways, however, he gained the window sill. And it did the reporter good to see him sitting there on that rocking sill, regaling his careless mates with the most picturesque abuse that was ever shouted across space. But the gang's hearts were in their mouths and they just stood there and listened to him while the foreman added:

"If any of you fellows pull that rope again I'll pitch you off this roof."

It was interesting to watch Walker's methods of testing a wall's safety. Wishing to move to another section, he would first pick out a brick and hurl it with all his might against that portion of the wall to which he wished to move. Sometimes, generally, this throw would be satisfactory, and he would clamber along to the desired place. Or perhaps the result of the impact would cause doubt, and another brick would be hurled. Then perhaps he would look at the foreman and shake his head. "No," he would mean, "that wall is too dangerous even for me."

When the foreman was asked how Walker could tell that the wall was unsafe or not by hurling bricks against it, the foreman said:

"Oh, he can tell by the way the wall acts." A rather indefinite explanation, this, but there are tricks in all trades.

\+ + + +

But finally the guy ropes were all made fast, and Walker had rigged the last of the hauling tackle and had scrambled down out of harm's way. A score of men tailed on to the cable end, and the foreman gave the word "Haul!" With a great grunt the men gave a long, steady pull, and the white mass of brick wavered, and then straightened back again in the most resilient manner. Another pull. The wall sagged, but again flew back. That was expected. The foreman, who had been studying the effects of the pulling, cried:

"She'll come this time; now let 'er go."

The men bent their backs, and then suddenly fell forward on their faces as the wall gave in. Slowly it leaned forward, and then, gathering sudden headway, pitched straight down into the bottom of the building with a roar that was deafening. As soon as the dust was settled Walker was leading another gang out on the walls to prepare things for another pull.

"Oh, yes," he said when seen later. "It is a risky job, but then what the Dickens!" He is a clean-cut young fellow, with wavy hair and clear gray eyes, and he says that he wants to get into the Fire Department. Well, he is of the fireman sort, certainly and surely. He ought to be in the department and not risking his life every day for no purpose other than the demolition of rotten walls. Frequently in this wrecking of buildings there are unsafe places which seem hardly likely to bear the additional weight of man and yet which must be mounted. At such times the foreman will give no order; he will just explain the conditions, and Walker, without a word, takes the chance. "It is a big risk," he says, "but what the Dickens!" and we are sorry that we have to use the euphemism Dickens. It's stronger the way he puts it.

\+ + +

The emergency gang is not controlled by the Building or any city department. The city gives the contract for this wall work to a private contractor—this year it is Bart Dunn, and he engages a number of shorers and riggers and houses them within call of the headquarters of the gang at Sixty-eighth Street and Avenue A. Here the emergency wagon is kept with a pair of horses ready night and day. A driver and the Superintendent are also on constant duty. The gang is summoned to duty by a Building Inspector, who in turn has been summoned by the police to inspect dangerous ruins.

The work requires men like Fred Walker; men without nerves; men who are ready to say, "What the Dickens!" men, in fact, who are ready to risk their lives at the rate of $3 a day.

Spring Tonics on Deposit.

CERTAINLY," said the cashier in a Times Square restaurant, as a customer, having his check, showed her a bottle of medicine, "but write your name on the label, so that I shall know it."

"I have a drug store under here," she said, pointing to a shelf beneath her desk. "That man is only one of a dozen of our regular patrons who has made the same request within a month. They are taking the usual Spring tonic, and the doctors who prescribe for them are evidently allopaths of the old school. They prefer four-ounce bottles to tabloids. No man likes to carry a bottle of medicine around in his pocket. If he leaves it in his office the chances are he will forget it when he most needs it. If he misses his dose it worries him. Most of the stuff must be taken either before or immediately after eating. The handiest way for the midday dose is to keep the bottle in the restaurant where he is in the habit of taking luncheon. He gets his bottle from me as he comes in, takes a dose at the table as prescribed, and deposits the bottle as he goes out. Lots of customers are in the habit of doctoring themselves at the luncheon hour.

"Trouble? Well, a little. But there are compensations. I take care of the daily dose of one man who is Treasurer of a theatre. Did I see the show? Guess again. And when I mentioned the fact that I was going to a customer whose beef, wine, and iron has been my especial care for three weeks, it didn't take him long to call a man from the corner who was selling violets and tell me to pick out the nicest bunch in the basket."

A Theatrical Post-mortem Talk With Annie Russell

THE curtain had rung down on "Jinny, the Carrier" for the last time. Faint handclaps had followed. The curtain had ascended gently, and Miss Russell had appeared. Then it had gone down for good.

The woman reporter was ushered to the dressing room by a tall boy. Annie Russell's husband, Oswald Yorke, received her there and escorted her courteously to Miss Russell.

It must be nice to go right along being Miss after you are married.

Both sat with her eventually. Both interviewed her at length upon her views of the play. Both looked tired.

"Nobody can understand who hasn't tried it," began Miss Russell, "what it is to go on and on with a play which has been pronounced a failure. You need appreciation to do your best work. To be obliged to do more than your best without appreciation"—words failed her.

"This play hadn't enough to separate the young people," explained Mr. Yorke; "merely their temper."

\+ + +

"It was a charming play," encouraged the woman. "I liked the singing of the birds outside the open door and the flowers. The smock frock of the old grandfather, too, was beautiful."

"Now, there!" exclaimed Miss Russell. "I could hardly forgive them that. They thought his beautiful old smock frock was his night gown."

The woman maintained a discreet silence here.

As a matter of fact, except that some one next to her had said, "Isn't that a lovely old smock frock!" she might have thought so, too.

"New York people are crassly ignorant," went on Miss Russell, excitedly, "about some things. I don't believe they read anything but the newspapers."

The woman smiled broadly.

"I am glad of that," she said, "since I write for them."

\+ + +

Mr. Yorke observed her a trifle uncomprehendingly, Miss Russell comprehendingly—she was born in England, but has been brought up in America—but not altogether liking it.

However, she let it pass.

"They didn't appear to understand this play at all," she complained. "There were many beautiful things in it they failed to see."

"Never mind," soothed the woman. "American plays fall in London. I've seen them do it myself."

"On the other hand," objected Mr. Yorke, "many have had great successes. Take 'Secret Service.' That had a splendid run. And 'Too Much Johnson,' and 'Held by the Enemy,' and a dozen others that I could mention. The English like the American plays, as a rule."

\+ + +

"I made my first success in London," remarked Miss Russell, quietly, "in Bret Harte's 'Sue.' That shows their liking for American plays."

"But was it strictly an American play?" queried the woman. "A Californian who wrote at such long range must have lost his Americanism to a certain extent, and did."

"'Sue' was distinctly American," said Miss Russell. "What did you think of the humor in 'Jinny, the Carrier'?"

The woman rather liked being interviewed. It saved a good deal of trouble. Besides, she was such a raw reporter she never knew what questions to ask.

"There was a good deal of quiet humor in it," she replied.

Mr. Yorke's painted countenance gleamed with triumph.

"The sort of humor," he exulted, "that one thinks over."

\+ + +

The woman thought that over. She began to believe that, after all, the English people might not be altogether responsible for their habit of seeing the joke on the following week; that perhaps the playwrights had had something to do with it. But she never said a word.

"The trouble was," reasoned Miss Russell, "that it was the humor of English life. It was provincial. Americans cannot comprehend the simplicity of English life. Their own is so much more complex. If it had been the story of an American village, a New England village, they might have comprehended it."

"Yes, it would have been different, maybe," assented the woman. "George Ade's 'County Chairman' made a bit at once, you know."

"A different sort of humor, entirely," asserted Mr. Yorke.

"A kind of humor humor," again assisted the woman, adding naively, "I don't see the point this minute, either, but I have sometimes thought that perhaps it was only a matter of digestion; that Americans digest humor more readily than the English do."

Miss Russell heaved a sigh.

"They didn't digest the humor in 'Jinny, the Carrier,'" she said.

This was a poser. Once more the woman was silent.

"Another trouble with New Yorkers," continued Miss Russell, "is that they are surfeited with plays. They see too many. They have too much going on all the time. Up and down Broadway names of plays flash in big electric headlines. Now, the play is part of an Englishman's life. He studies his play as he does his paintings. A play is Art to an Englishman. The papers in London devote column after column each morning to discussions of drama and opera. Here it is entirely different. Plays are intended only to amuse. Everything must be light and frivolous. Nothing is serious. Nobody is serious," and she shook her head with a gesture of hopelessness.

\+ + +

"It will be a long time before we are educated up to the English standard in many ways," lamented the woman. "We may be dead first."

Mr. Yorke looked at Miss Russell to see what this meant.

With a slight nod Miss Russell signified that it didn't matter.

"This is the second failure we have had this Winter," she sighed.

"It has been a Winter of dramatic failures," comforted the woman. "Besides, it wasn't your fault. Your acting couldn't have been better. It was the play I think. It was hardly as Zangwillish as it should have been."

Miss Russell frowned a little.

"He has written only one or two other plays," she said. "He has hardly had time to acquire a distinct style, has he?"

\+ + +

The woman thought that if a playwright failed to acquire a distinct style in two plays, he should quit. She thought, also, that "Jinny, the Carrier" might have been improved by a few Sardoulish burnings at the stake, perhaps by a whole conflagration, but she didn't say so. Instead she tacked.

"The stage settings were quaint," she smiled. "I liked them. In the second act as you stood the entire second scene to come in at the window. It was realistic, very."

Miss Russell was visibly pleased. The woman kept on:

"And, as you say, it was full of quiet humor that they didn't appreciate. I know how it must be to get off unappreciated humor. I have watched it. I demolished more than one pair of gloves in London trying to encourage our minstrels there. It don't do an end man a bit of good for his audience to see the joke the next day."

She stopped suddenly, realizing dimly that she was on the wrong tack altogether.

\+ + +

Again Mr. Yorke telegraphed his wife to know "where they were at" now, and again she signified with a slight contraction of the eyebrows that it didn't matter.

It was she who did the tacking this time.

"We sail next week," she said. "We go to France. Then we will put 'Jinny, the Carrier' on in London. We hope to make a success of it on its native heath. The English will appreciate its strong points. They will understand its humor."

"I wish you all the success you deserve with it," said the woman, trying to square herself as she got up to go, "and I couldn't wish you more. May I have a few pictures of you?"

"We haven't a picture left," regretted Miss Russell, "everybody is so anxious for souvenirs of this giant failure, but we will send them to you."

"You will have hailed, perhaps," remarked the woman, "before my article comes out."

"But we will see it," asserted Miss Russell promptly. "You will spread yourself in all probability. You will 'roast' the life out of us!"

"Never," vowed the woman, indignantly.

"If you do," threatened Miss Russell, "I wish to warn you that though both of us go, we leave a friend behind us in Weesy," and, flinging wide a door she disclosed Weesy, her maid.

\+ + +

"She is Irish," she explained. Then to Weesy: "Weesy, take a good look at this lady. Remember her in case she puts uncomplimentary things about us in the papers."

It was realized.

Weesy took a good look at the lady, who recoiled.

"I promise to be good," said she faintly. "Besides, how could I say uncomplimentary things of such delightful people?"

After that Miss Russell offered her a gracious hand, and Mr. Yorke escorted her out with even more courtesy than he had employed in escorting her in.

"Before you go," he said, "have you seen my dog?"

"I have not," returned the woman.

He opened the door of another dressing room.

A large, aggressive dog bounded playfully out. He was too large for a pug, but he was on the pug order, with eyes on the corners of his head.

"A bull terrier," explained Mr. Yorke, and patted him affectionately on the head while the woman stood off at a respectful distance.

"Are you going to leave him behind with Weesy?" she asked in a far-away voice which bore a faint resemblance to the one she ordinarily used.

"No," answered Mr. Yorke, "we are going to take him with us."

The woman gave a great sigh of relief as she walked with him across the big black stage beyond which the empty house gaped cave-like.

"Anyway, I had already given my word not to say anything uncomplimentary," she told him at the stage door. Z. A. N.

POSSIBILITIES OF A HOT EGG.

A SIGN, "Hot Egg Sandwich," appealed to the pompous young lawyer, and briskly he entered the restaurant.

"An egg sandwich," addressing the courteous waiter and looking about the crowded dining room imperiously.

No sooner had the sandwich received a cursory examination from the particular lawyer than he shouted indignantly:

"Here, waiter, this is not what I ordered!"

"You ordered an egg sandwich, Sir," humbly rejoined the servant.

"And is this egg, you driveling dunce," sputtered the patron as he disclosed a portion of chicken lodged between the slices of bread.

"My dear Sir," expostulated the waiter most generously, "you evidently are not able to appreciate the possibilities of a

An East Side Interpretation.

A TEACHER in an east side mission school in New York had found it a difficult task to interest her class of street youngsters in Bible stories. Her determination, however, to make real to her boys the tales dear to her own childhood was great, as was also her satisfaction on observing one Sunday the deep interest with which one Tommy, the ringleader of her little horde, was listening to her account of the life of the boy Joseph, especially the part relating to his sale by his brethren into Egypt.

Alert to strengthen any possible hold already gained, on the following Sunday she politely requested Tommy to repeat the story of Joseph.

After a little urging Tommy began somewhat reluctantly, but, being endowed with the gifts of a raconteur, he warmed to his subject. The teacher was noting with pleasure the way in which the other boys followed the racy recital—a recital correct enough in its facts, though, rendered in the dialect of Chimmie Fadden, it scarcely retained its scriptural flavor. The emotion was interrupted by the following statement:

"Den de udder guys, whut wus dis feller's brudders, t'ought dey'd make deir fader t'ink dat Joseph wus done fer. So dey took his coat, whut his fader'd gav him oncet before, and dey soused it in de blood of a baby—"

"Why, Tommy!"

"Whut's de matter?" demanded Tommy, conscious of rectitude and annoyed at interruption.

"Not in the blood of a baby!"

"Dat's whut youse said," cried Tommy, warmly. "Ain't dat so, fellers?"

"Dat's right!" chorused the "fellers."

"Youse told us dat dey killed a kid!"

Primitive Races of Mankind and the Average American

Interesting Results of Professor Woodworth's Anthropological Studies of the Philippine Tribesmen, African Pigmies, Ainoos of Japan, and Other Uncivilized Human Specimens at the St. Louis Exposition.

ONE of the greatest obstacles which anthropologists in general and anthropometrists in particular have been forced to meet in the past has been the difficulty with which they have had to contend in carrying on their researches at first hand among the more inaccessible races of Asia and Africa. The lessons to be learned from the few remaining, but even now fast disappearing, primitive races of man are of the first importance in the development of the science of the human being, and they are those to which the anthropologist of the present day is most intently turning.

The most interesting of these lessons are, however, the least easily obtained. They are those whose subjects are hidden in the jungles of Central Africa, in the barren islands of our own Pacific possessions, and in the cold and cheerless wilds into which the South American continent dwindles at its southernmost point. From time to time travelers and explorers in these countries, more or less ably equipped for scientific research, have made known the results of their findings, and these have been received with due notice by the students of anthropology. Together with the observations reported upon the same subjects by other persons, they contributed, until the researches made last Summer at the Louisiana Purchase Exposition, at St. Louis, almost the sole basis for the theories which scientific men have built up concerning the origin and development of the human race, and the comparative physical proportions and mental abilities of the different peoples of the earth.

On the face of them, such data as these collected at random and at various times and often by men more ably trained in the sciences of geography and topography than in those of anthropology and anthropometry, were not of the most satisfactory or trustworthy order. It was for this reason that scientific observers the world over eagerly seized upon the opportunity presented by the aggregation at the Louisiana Purchase Exhibition of a large number of primitive tribesmen from the Philippine Islands, and, in a smaller number, of members of the Congo Pygmy nation, of the hairy Ainoos aborigines of Northern Japan, and of the wild and uncivilized Patagonians, to conduct among them researches tending to throw new light upon the science of anthropology and its subdivision, anthropometry.

Never before in the lives of living anthropologists had so varied a collection of primitive races been brought together, fresh from their wild and savage haunts, and placed at the disposal of scientific observers, under conditions so helpful to research. Prof. R. S. Woodworth of Columbia University, a trained scientific worker, was placed in charge of the researches, and the results of his observations and measurements were first made public to a TIMES representative recently.

The researches carried on by Prof. Woodworth were largely along the lines of anthropometry and dealt chiefly with the physical proportions and strength of body and vision of the different specimens presented to his observation. The Filipinos were compared in these respects with a large number of Americans, chosen at random from the visitors at the exhibition, and with the Ainoos, Patagonians, and other primitive peoples measured. Of the tribes represented the Cagayan averaged considerably the tallest. Fifteen members of this tribe were measured, and the average height reached was 163 centimeters, or about five feet five inches. The Visayans were the second tallest group, averaging 161.9 centimeters. The Filipinos proper, Tagalogs, Pampangas, Bicols, and Moros ranged in height from 161, in the case of the last, to 161.6 in that of the first named groups. Forty-one Pampasinans averaged 160.3, and seventy-two Ilocanos, 160.6 centimeters. The Tinguians dropped to 155, just below the Bogobos, at 156.7, and the Igorotes to 154 centimeters.

The Negritos were by far the smallest of the tribesmen. Thirteen specimens averaged scarcely 148.8 centimeters, or approximately four feet ten inches. In the other physical measurements and strength tests the Negritos were correspondingly inferior to the other tribes. In the strength of back, measured by a weight-lifting test, they were rated at 106.5, as against the Tinguians at 117.9, the second weakest tribe, and the Filipinos proper at 135.5. In leg strength they averaged 138.2 points to the 176 points of the Tinguians, and the Filipinos' 221.2. Their right-hand grip was 8.4 points below that of the next lowest group, and 21.1 points below that of the average American. In quickness, however, they excelled the Filipinos, Moros, Bogobos, and Tinguians, and were 1.5 points ahead of the Americans. In the accuracy test they fell far below all the other Philippine tribes.

On the whole, the Philippine race which most nearly approached the standard set by the Americans in physical development were the Filipinos proper. Although this does not hold true in the cases of stature and quickness, in which the Filipinos were excelled by the Tinguians and even the Negritos, it holds true in all other cases.

Another of the until recently little known peoples of the earth which came under Prof. Woodworth's observations were the hairy and almost dwarfish Ainoos of the northern and northeastern shores of the Japanese island of Yezzo. There were only four members of this race present at the Exposition, and consequently the accuracy percentage of the measurements taken on them is comparatively small. The scarcity of accurate data previously at hand concerning this aboriginal people renders them, however, of great importance.

The average stature of the Ainoo specimens at the St. Louis Exposition, as given by Prof. Woodworth, is 156.9 centimeters, or 15.1 centimeters, or approximately six inches, below that of the average American stature. Compared in height with the Philippine races, they approximate most nearly to the Bogobos, who averaged 156.7 centimeters. In strength of back they were far inferior, however, to the Bogobos, the figures for the two races being, respectively, 96.3 and 134.9. Compared with the white American they fell 55.3 points below his standard, and with the American Indian, 54.2 points below. The only race which in back strength was inferior to the Ainoos was the African pygmy, rated at 80. In leg strength, however, they were superior to the Negritos by 14.6 points, and to the pygmies, but inferior to all the other races. In this test they averaged 152.8 points to the American average of 242.8. In the strength of hand, measured by a grip test, they were likewise superior to the Negritos and the pygmies. In the matter of quickness, however, they excelled all the other races tested, not excluding the white Americans.

The most interesting people with which Prof. Woodworth's researches had to do were, in many respects, the African pygmies from the Congo Free State. The knowledge which the world had previously had of this singular branch of the human race was most limited.

There are two types of the pygmy race, varying little in size, but distinguished by a difference in the color of skin and hair. One of the types inclines to a reddish tinge of skin and hair, and the other is entirely black. The specimens sent to the St. Louis Exposition were of the latter, or black, type. Sir Harry H. Johnston computed the average height of males at four feet seven inches and that of females at four feet two inches. Some of the pygmies which came under his observation were considerably under four feet. The seven males measured by Prof. Woodworth averaged 151.6 centimeters. This figure is considerably above that of Johnston, and is due probably to the fact that the best developed specimens of the race obtainable were sent to St. Louis.

The comparative anthropometry of these unique little brothers and sisters of ours, as determined by Prof. Woodworth, cannot fail of interest. Standing a pygmy alongside of the average American, the little fellow's head would come about to a level with the second button on the American's coat. In strength of his back alone he could carry a burden of only 80 units to the American's 151.6, and his tiny legs, which carry him through the wilds of Africa, but which are yet undeveloped by the toil of civilization, would do only 94.6 units of work to the 242.8 done by the legs of the ordinary robust American. In shaking hands with his Western brothers he would also be at a great disadvantage with a right-hand grip of only 30.1 to the American's 53.3. In quickness, however, he is far superior not only to the American but to all the primitive races represented at St. Louis except the Ainoos and Igorotes, and loses to these by small margins. In accuracy again he is not up to his larger and more advanced rivals. On the basis of 84 points adopted as the American standard he would be awarded only 66.75. The Cacopan Indians and Patagonians alone are less accurate than he—nimble little bowman though he be.

There were only four Patagonians at the disposal of Prof. Woodworth, and he is consequently not strongly insistent upon the degree of exactness with which his figures would compare with those obtained from a larger number. In the matter of stature especially it is open to question if the average of 176.3 centimeters obtained from the Patagonians at the Exposition is not somewhat above that of the whole race. Just how much in excess of the true figure it is can hardly be arrived at satisfactorily from data at present in the hands of anthropometrists. For although not less accessible than the people of Central Africa, those of the southernmost portions of our own continent are really much less known to scientists than those of Africa and their data less reliable. In the strength of back the Patagonians are 9.1 points above the Americans, the second strongest, and 80.7 points, or almost exactly twice, stronger than the pygmies. In strength of legs they are slightly ahead of the Americans, though they approach them more nearly in this particular than any other people, but are decidedly inferior to the North American Indian. They have a hand grip of about the same force as the Eskimo, and 6.45 less than that of the American hand. In quickness they excel the American, and are almost exactly as quick as the Moros. They are 14.9 points less accurate than the Americans, and in this particular on a plane with the Mexican Indians.

One of the most interesting lessons which Prof. Woodsworth has drawn from his anthropological investigations among the primitive races at St. Louis has to do with the keenness of eyesight and sense of color in the civilized and uncivilized peoples. The test by which he arrived at his figures was made by placing the letter E in various positions and at various distances from the subject and then requiring him to determine in which position it rested. Assuming as a standard the average American white male of normal vision—not needing glasses—the results obtained were as follows: Bogobo, 114; Filipino, 110; Patagonian, 110; Moro, 107; Indian, 106; Tinguaian, 102; Igorote, 100; white American, 100; Eskimo, 99; Cingalese, 97; African pygmy, 92; Negrito, 90; Ainoo, 60. These tests were undertaken in a large measure to determine the validity of the theory that as certain races less civilized than our own have keener eyesight than ours it is to be inferred that civilization has injured our sight not only in specific cases of individuals who are compelled to wear glasses, but in a less extent throughout the whole population.

The results obtained by Prof. Woodworth do not by any means strengthen this theory. Quite on the contrary, the fact that the least civilized races examined—the Negritos, Ainoos, pygmies—had the poorest sight would seem to point directly away from it. A number of Filipino students sent to this country by the Government to study, whose eyes had been used as steadily as those of the average American, were examined, and no appreciable difference was discovered between their sight and that of the untutored Filipino soldiers.

Although able to recognize more distant objects than the American, the Filipino is far less keen than he in distinguishing colors. The percentage of color-blindness is about the same in the two races—that is, 5 per cent.—but when not at all chargeable with color-blindness the Filipino is still dull to the sense of color. The question was once raised by Gladstone whether blue was seen more by primitive people as a true color or as a dark and neutral shade, such as gray, because he had failed to discern in his reading of Homer any distinctive name for it. Upon further investigation it was learned that many other primitive people had no name for blue. From this fact it was inferred that the sense of color necessary to separate blue from its co-ordinate colors was higher than that possessed by primitive races. Yet, despite the fact that the Filipino languages have no word of their own for blue, those Filipinos who were tested for color sense were found to distinguish and match blue as well as red. Their inferior color sense was not attached to any particular color, but was universal.

Don'ts for the Young Teacher---The Lessons of Experience

THERE is no such thing as a hard and fast set of rules for a young teacher to follow. The successful teacher is never a product of any "school" or "method" of instruction. Tomes of information, it is true, have been written on the subject, all reading well and sounding plausible, but tending to make mechanical teachers and proving of little practical value when the actual problems of discipline present themselves.

\+ + +

Pity the young teacher in a large, public school, who is trying to teach according to some "method" she has studied. She is generally stiff, formal, afraid of herself and of her pupils, who, with the unerring instinct of youth, are perfectly conscious of the fact and proceed to take advantage of it, with disastrous results.

These "don'ts" of mine, the result of observation and experience, are not given with intent to formulate a method, but as a friendly word of forewarning. After all, though older teachers may advise and suggest many practical ways and means, the young teacher must devise for herself her own way of solving the many and varied problems of school life.

Whatever method you may employ in teaching let it be of your own invention, and, by the way, you won't be able to formulate it either until you are well into your work and have become fairly well acquainted with your pupils. You may determine beforehand, in a general way, how you will conduct yourself when called upon to preserve order during a study hour, but you will soon find that pupils are individuals who cannot be disposed of collectively, according to rule, but must be studied and dealt with as separate personalities.

Use your common sense when problems of discipline or of teaching arise. Observe, draw your own conclusions, experiment; if you can't succeed in [illegible] to a child or a class in one way try another. Presently some one thing that you do or say will have the desired effect. You have conquered. From that moment your reputation is made. Your pupils will probably speak of you as "a dandy teacher"; your associates will respect you as a good disciplinarian. Then when some would-be teacher asks you what "method" you have studied you will undoubtedly tell her out of your experience just what I am telling you out of mine.

The first great law to be learned in teaching is self-control. You cannot control others until you have mastered yourself. Don't lose your temper. You will have it tried almost beyond endurance a dozen times a day, but be patient, don't give in to it. If you do, you will lose just that much ground with your pupils. If you fly into a passion before a class or study room, the result in nine cases out of ten will be laughter. You can't blame the children. A person in a temper is apt to be a mirth-provoking sight. Or you may get sullen disobedience as a result of your lack of self-control. Whatever the result, it will be your loss, not your gain. Don't try it.

Avoid sarcasm. Many young teachers believe this to be a very effective method of keeping order. There is no more fatal mistake. If there is one thing a child hates more than another it is to be ridiculed before his mates, and the result is generally sullenness and continued disobedience. Don't nag. Children think it's great fun to keep a teacher at it if she once begins, and she'll soon find life a burden and herself a habitual shrew.

Don't see too much. That is to say, try to overlook the small and perfectly harmless things that children do in class or in study hour. I have seen teachers who broke the silence of a study room to reprove a child for leaning over to pick up a pin from the floor. This is not discipline; it's fussiness on the part of the teacher or a mistaken notion that perfect order means physical repose. Try to remember that when children are cramming their brains, as they are obliged to do these days, their nervous energy must have some outlet. Let them have their little moments of distraction if they do not disturb the general order and quiet.

Don't be suspicious. Trust your pupils first and always. If you are forever trying to catch them at something you may be sure they'll give you a good chase. Besides, this attitude of distrust on the part of a teacher breeds dishonesty and deceit in the pupil. If you really have good cause to suspect a child, pretend at least to be blind to his fault; you will soon have all the chance you want to discover him in mischief when he is off his guard; then reprove him. The most successful way I know of to control the "bad boy" of the school is to intrust to him some particular duty and hold him responsible for it. One of the most unruly boys I ever had to deal with became in the course of the term a trustworthy, lovable, and studious child because there had been given into his keeping the key to the cloakroom, which he had to be on hand to unlock in the morning and lock again after the children had deposited their wraps there. The thought that he occupied a position of trust raised him in his own estimation. The experiment proved successful. This is but one of many ways in which a child may be made to feel that he is trusted. There is no stronger appeal. Help the child to respect himself if he is wayward; he will respect you in turn and your control of him will be absolute because founded on the right motive. He will obey because he wants to; not because he is forced.

Never demand obedience in loud, ringing tones. Command it by the silent but much more impressive force of your own personality. A look, a gesture will go further than a fist shaken or a foot stamped. Be a diplomat, and you will earn a diplomat's reward.

Don't have favorites. If your pupils suspect that you are partial, you will suffer. Don't threaten a class or an individual child unless you can carry out your threat. Don't say, "The next time you do such and such a thing, I shall keep you after school." If you mean to keep the child after hours, keep him that very day. Never promise and then fail to fulfill. This applies to both punishment and reward.

Don't turn individual cases for discipline over to the Principal of the school. Wage and win your own battle, even at the risk of long and nerve-racking encounters. When you do succeed, as you are bound to, both you and the child will have gained.

When in charge of a study hour don't pace the floor as if you were a sentry on guard. Take you seat at the desk; try always to have work of your own to do that shall give you an appearance of being as fully occupied as the pupils, while yet giving you a chance to glance up now and then to see that all is well. You will find that your attitude of quiet concentration will be imparted to the entire assemblage. Remember that your personality dominates the study room while you are in charge.

Your conduct in the classroom differs somewhat from your attitude in the study room. Here, while imparting your subject, you are expected to be alert, active, energetic, while the study hour demanded of you is just the opposite. In the matter of discipline, however, you will find the situation practically the same.

Don't be too formal in your classroom. Treat your pupils as if they and you were members of a club, met together for a mutual benefit, which is, after all, the truth. You can gain quite as much in your contact with these fresh young minds as they receive from the force of your example and the knowledge you impart to them. Get into personal touch with the members of your class. This does not mean familiarity, but friendly interest. It will be mutually inspiring, believe me. If you conduct your class on this principle you will find that the discipline will take care of itself. Keep your pupils interested. It is only when mind and hand are idle that mischievous instincts come to the fore. Don't have a conventional way of presenting your subject, so that they may know from day to day just what to expect. Change your way of doing things every day or two—surprise them; keep them guessing what you are going to say to them to-morrow. The child mind demands variety in order to hold the interest. You must combine the qualities of a good actor and a strategist. Like the actor, play to them; make your subject graphic. Children must have things pictured to them by actual sketches, vivid description, or both. Scheme, like the strategist, to have them, without realizing it, say and do what you wish. Keep on your feet as much as possible; you are more tactful and can better hold the attention of your class when standing or moving about the classroom. Don't expect a child to know a thing after only once telling it to him, nor be content to let him fail if he cannot answer some question that has been asked him. The question may not have been clearly put; try it another way. Nine times out of ten the child answers "I don't know" from embarrassment. Patience and skillful handling, not sharp, sarcastic comments, will bring the desired results in such cases.

Don't allow yourself to enter class or study room with a frown on your face. Be dignified, but try to look cheerful. Feign it if you don't feel it. How can you expect children to be bright, responsive, or attentive when facing a disagreeable-looking teacher? Be as careful about your personal appearance as about your behavior. There are no worse critics than children. Remember that while they are in your care you are an example set for them to follow, and you must take great care that you are the right kind of example. They come to you at the formation period of their lives, and you can make or mar them. A teacher's responsibility is a heavy one. It is a sacred trust that she has to fulfill. What she gives those young minds from between the covers of a book is only half her mission. The other half is, after all, the greater—to form the habits of thought, speech, and action of these future men and women. Many are the men and women now prominent in public life who have acknowledged with gratitude the inspiration and helpful influence of some teacher of their early days.

While your pupils are in your care you are the authorized representative of their mothers, who hold you responsible for the mental, moral, and physical well-being of their children. See to it, therefore, that you shall have nothing to regret when you render up your account.

CHARA KINGSLEY LEWIS.

Something to Make New Yorkers Think

Washington, May 5, 1905.

IN Washington the relations between conductor and passenger are so nearly ideal that visiting New Yorkers can hardly believe their eyes. The conductor here does not jaw the passengers and is not jawed. Both parties act apparently on the assumption that they will get along very well if they treat each other as human beings.

A while ago a conductor found that his pocket had been picked and he had lost a lot of tickets, amounting to $10 in value. An item to that effect appearing in the newspapers, the passengers who were in the habit of traveling to and from their offices on his car made up a purse of $10 and sent it to him with a note to the effect that it was in recognition of his unfailing courtesy and consideration. Think of that, ye New Yorkers!

\+ + +

On the Washington trolley lines they sell six tickets for a quarter; the fare for a single trip is a nickel. On the rear platform of a car the other night a passenger touched the conductor on the arm, saying:

"How about my tickets?"

"I thought you gave me a nickel," said the conductor, looking worried. "Did you give me a quarter?"

"I did."

"If you are sure of it I'll have to give you the tickets," said the conductor, disconsolately pulling them out. "I'd have sworn it was a nickel."

He was about to go into the car, when the passenger, taking out a letter from his pocket, said:

"I don't want you to worry over this thing. I haven't a card with me, but this envelope contains my address. If at the end of your trip you find yourself short 20 cents write to me at this address and I'll make it right without question."

"Thank you," said the conductor, his face clearing. He no more suspected the passenger's promise than the passenger suspected that the conductor would send him a bill for 20 cents unless it was actually due. Such are the relations of conductor and passenger in Washington.

New York Riding Club Will Have Ideal Home

INTERIOR OF RECEPTION ROOM SHOWING ENTRANCE HALL

THE RING AS IT WILL APPEAR

BRADFORD L. GILBERT
THE ARCHITECT

When the Improvements Begun Have Been Completed It Will Have No Equal in the World--Ring Will Be Largest in America--Problems the Architect Has Successfully Met.

EARLY one morning last week a group of gentlemen stood in a corner of the tan-bark ring at the Riding Club at 7 East Fifty-eighth Street and watched James T. Woodward, the President, break ground for the extensive alterations and additions to the club building. Following the formal manipulation of the spade, and a few words in a congratulatory vein by the wielder of it, a battalion of workmen piled into the building with axe and saw and hammer and began the work of translating the old familiar environment into memory.

And thus were put into practical effect the hopes and ambitions that have thrilled the members of the Riding Club for the past decade. On Nov. 1 next the club building will have attained its apotheosis, so to speak. Internally, externally, there will be little to give hint of what it was. The transformation will be complete. Inside the ring will be almost twice as large as it is at present—it will be the largest riding ring in the country—and there will be lounging rooms, dining rooms, a commodious billiard room, dressing rooms, a palm garden, and, in fact, aside from the riding ring and the stalls and the hospital, every luxury and convenience for members that a wealthy and popular club suggests. Outside the improvements will be no less radical, and from an exterior at the present time architecturally insignificant, to say the least, will appear a pleasing and harmonious blending of artistic effects that will place the Riding Club prominently among those buildings in this city which are to be admired and studied.

It was eminently fitting that President Woodward in his brief address should have extended on behalf of the club special congratulations and deep gratitude to one of his fellow-members, Bradford L. Gilbert, architect, whose plans in behalf of the Riding Club beautiful and the Riding Club adequate were, in the simple ceremony, of breaking ground, brought to the dawn of fulfillment.

For the enlarging and remodeling and beautifying of this club building involved no easy task, and to it Mr. Gilbert, in the past year, has devoted not a little of his time and all of his ability. Problem after problem confronted him, but each was solved in turn, patiently and lovingly—this work, for the architect, was a labor of love—and at the last was evolved a series of plans and specifications that satisfied every member of the club—that satisfied, above all, Mr. Gilbert.

Primarily the architect was confronted by a building that was old when the Riding Club bought it in 1881, and which in 1885 had been patched with a side addition, which, while serving its purpose of enlarging the club area, hardly added to the architectural pulchritude of the building. And so the first consideration was the merging of the amorphous pile of brick into a harmonious whole, and just how happy the solution of this question has been may be appreciated by a study of the building as it will be, which is presented herewith. And yet the really striking results could be better observed by a view of the model prepared by Mr. Louis Tiffany, in which the exterior color effects are beautifully brought out.

As will be seen from the cut, the building will be of early Norman design, with all the pointed wall effects, the tessellated balconies and entrances, and bay windows that this type of architecture suggests. But as has been said, it is the color effects that strikingly enhance the charm of design. In the main, both the Fifty-eighth Street and Fifty-ninth Street façades will present the prevailing tone of soft French caen stone, a vague, indefinite, glowing light gray, set off by roof and balconies and bay windows of verde antique. In his selection of the exterior color scheme Mr. Gilbert spent a great deal of study, and, in fact, he was not decided as to his subordinate color until when in Rome last year he picked up the old verde antique statuette which gave him his inspiration. The combination as seen in the model presents nothing less than a symphony of soft, delightful tones.

The façades will be worked right over the present brick walls in artificial caen concrete, which, in the course of a week or so assumes all the qualities of the unyielding granite. Some of the windows and door openings of the present structure will be left intact, while others will be closed, and new openings cut in other places. Where old windows and entrances have subserved Mr. Gilbert's conception of the remodeled building they will remain as they are, but, as a matter of fact, the exceptions of this kind are so few as to hardly warrant mentioning. Essentially, the building, on Nov. 1, will be a new building; it will be as though the old structure had been razed.

Inside there were still greater problems. In the first place there was to be the addition of another story, a fourth story, with the preservation of the present roof. This involved the raising, or will involve the raising of the roof in order that the new story may be constructed under it. And this problem of raising the roof in turn suggested the question of the disposition of the two enormous roof trusses which at the present time span the length of the riding ring. They will not be taken down. By an engineering process they will be slung around so as to cross the breadth of the ring, serving the purpose which they serve now in supporting the roof.

Of course the main desideratum was the enlarging of the riding ring, and this will be served by knocking down the wall that separates the present ring from the stalls at the Fifty-eighth Street side of the building and merging that space in the ring. This will result in a ring 104 by 173.6 feet, or a ring of 18,000 square feet, the largest ring in the country. Durland's ring is 17,676 square feet in area.

The ring which is now at the street level will be raised ten feet, and on the present ring level and in a basement below that level will be tiers of stalls, 400 in all—over 100 more stalls than there are at present, and at the same time space will be allowed for 50 additional stalls. From the stalls to the ring, the entrance to which will be at the Fifty-ninth Street end, there will be a runway with a rise of an inch to the foot, so that the incline from stall to street or ring will hardly be perceptible.

By a new process of ventilation the air in the stalls and the ring will be changed every eight minutes, so that to all practical purposes the riders will exercise in open air. On the first floor, which of course goes up ten feet with the ring, will be the present lounging room for the men, with the addition of an elaborate system of dressing rooms and baths and the club offices. The office of the Superintendent will be so situated that he can observe not only the ring, but the street and stall runways, the main entrance, and in fact the entire lower floor.

On the second floor will be an elaborate suite of sitting rooms, smoking rooms, library, and the like, with great windows opening out on the ring. Between these rooms, which are to be on the Fifty-eighth Street side—the ring runs flush up to Fifty-ninth Street—and the ring circle will be a twelve-foot terrace scheme running down to the ring. This terrace will be treated in accordance with the utmost art of the landscape gardener, and, merging with the space immediately surrounding the entire ring, which will be treated in old Venetian garden effect, will form a picture not to be seen anywhere in this city, if indeed in the world.

On the third floor will be an immense billiard room and café, with dressing rooms and baths for ladies and misses, while on the fourth floor will be two large dining rooms, separated by a palm garden, with fountains and statuary. The west dining room, in a restricted sense, will probably be utilized as a grill room. And at the western extremity is still another dining room, a small one for private parties.

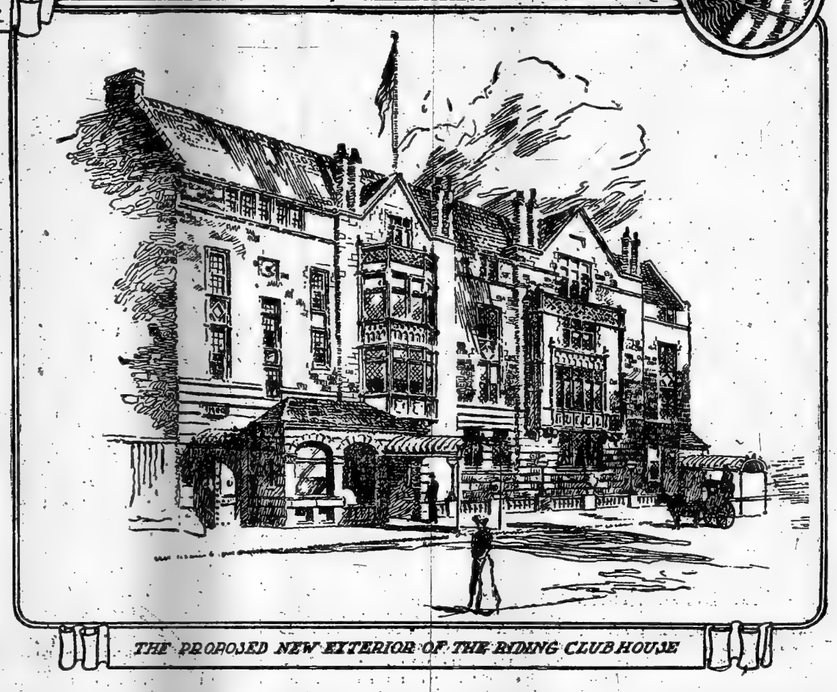
Louis Tiffany is now studying for the interior effects of color and decoration, and while at present he is not far enough advanced to make any statement it may be announced on the authority of the architect that the prevailing tones will be quiet, a fact no doubt suggested to the reader by the exterior tonal effects.

In everything that goes to make for luxury and taste the Riding Club will not be lacking, and even in its utilitarian aspects, such as the veterinary department, the stalls, and the like, the club will present evidence of taste and beauty and art.

There is no elective riding club like this in the country. There are many public academies, but there is nothing public about the Riding Club, which in every way is a club in the essential meaning of the term. It has some 500-odd members; whose wives and daughters partake of all its advantages, and was organized in 1881 principally through the efforts and enthusiasm of H. H. Hollister, who was President for twenty-one years.

In that time it has maintained a steady and consistent growth, and numbers among its members many of the most prominent riders in this city. The officers are James T. Woodward, President of the Hanover Bank, President; W. C. Gulliver of the law firm of Alexander & Green, Secretary, and Walter P. Bliss, Treasurer.

In addition to the efforts of Mr. Gilbert the club is grateful to J. H. Alexander, the Chairman of the Building Committee, whose energy contributed not a little to the present good fortune of the club. The alterations and repairs, he announced, will cost under $200,000.



THE PROPOSED NEW EXTERIOR OF THE RIDING CLUB HOUSE

Colony Club Formed by Society Woman a Very Exclusive Organization

WORKMEN a few days ago began tearing down the houses at 120, 122, and 124 Madison Avenue, corner of Thirtieth Street, to make room for the new building of the Colony Club, which is composed for the most part of the wives and daughters of New York's men of wealth and social position. McKim, Mead & White, the architects, promise to have the new clubhouse ready within eighteen months. For the first time since the organization of the club a meeting was held at the home of J. Pierpont Morgan last week at which the various committees reported progress. Mr. Morgan, Mr. Charles T. Barney, Mr. Frank Polk, and Mr. Julien Gerard constitute the Advisory Board. Mr. Morgan, with his daughter Anne, Treasurer of the club, is in Europe. So are Mrs. John Jacob Astor, the Secretary, and Mrs. W. S. Rainsford, Miss Kate Brice, and Miss Caro de Forrest of the Board of Governors. Otherwise the attendance at the meeting was thoroughly representative, including Mrs. J. Borden Harriman, the President; Mrs. Richard Irvin, First Vice President; Mrs. Reginald Bishop, Mrs. John E. Cowdin, Mrs. Walter Damrosch, Miss Mary Harriman, Mrs. Thomas Hastings, Mrs. Payne Whitney, Mrs. Clarence Mackay, Mrs. Walter Maynard, Mrs. Henry F. Osborn, Miss Mary Parsons, Miss Florence Rhett, and Mrs. Edgerton Winthrop, Jr.

After the meeting one of the officers denied a report that the Colony Club was so expensive and exclusive that difficulty was experienced in filling its membership roll, and that amalgamation with the Woman's Club of New York, which already has a home at 9 East Forty-sixth Street, was contemplated. "We are having no difficulty at all in getting members," said this officer. "For the present our policy is rather one of exclusion. Getting rid of undesirable members, once admitted, is a difficult and disagreeable task. We are anxious to avoid it. The objects of our club and the Woman's Club are so different that a union of the two clubs is out of the question. Our club is intended, primarily, for women living in New York. The other club has as many non-resident members as resident members. We shall have a non-resident list, of course. Bedrooms will be provided where out-of-town members may put up if they do not wish to go to a hotel. Our members are half the time traveling—in Europe or in the West and South. An interchange of courtesies with women's clubs on a similar scale in other cities, and a non-resident list is not only desirable but necessary. But we don't mean to allow non-resident members to interfere in the management of the club.

"There is no reason to fear shortage of funds. We have all the money we require—at present, anyway. Our initiation fee is $150, and annual dues for resident members $100. Non-residents are charged the same initiation fee, with $50 annual dues. For girls from sixteen to twenty years old, of the families of full members, the annual dues will be $25, with no initiation fee. For children of the families of full members the annual dues will be $10, with no initiation fee. This is done to give the younger members of our families the advantages of the splendid gymnasium, the squash, and tennis courts, and the baths. It will be much more agreeable for them than going to gymnasiums, as they do now. Capable instructors will be engaged. Our critics fear that, at the rates mentioned, it will require more than 400 or 500 members to put a clubhouse so large as ours on a paying basis. Our committees, who have gone over the ground carefully, think differently. At any rate, we shall have no difficulty in increasing the membership if we wish to.

"By-laws and rules have been formulated and discussed, but not formally adopted. Yes, we shall have a wine room and a buffet where members can get drinks if they want them. Why not? The plans do not provide for a smoking room, as such, but I presume a place will be provided for women who do not see any indiscretion in taking a cigarette with their coffee after dinner or luncheon. Clubs in London and on the Continent give us precedent for that. Women who do not like to see other women smoke need not go where they can see them. I believe nobody disputes the fact that hundreds of thousands of cigarettes are sold in New York to women who are mixed up in what is known as society. The presumption is they are manufactured and sold to smoke. Our object is to offer to members a social, athletic, and literary club where there will be such privileges, conveniences, and privacy as are insured in any first-class New York club. That is comprehensive enough, surely.

"Men will not be excluded from the building. That would be foolish. But they will not be admitted to the club. Members who wish to entertain men can do so in a reserved part of the building reached by a separate entrance."

Blue-print plans of the new clubhouse which have been filed by the architects were taken to the meeting and carefully scanned by the members. The building, which will be of white marble and brick, is much larger than many of them had been led to suppose. Its ultimate cost will probably reach $250,000. Stanford White has made the structure classically Colonial in style. In the new Tiffany Building, the Knickerbocker Trust Building, and Dr. Parkhurst's new church he exhibits a growing tendency to simple and severe treatment. The Colonial Club will be 100 feet deep and 75 feet wide. Its main entrance will be in Thirtieth Street, with a broad marble staircase leading to the elevators. The Russian and Turkish baths, with a swimming pool 56 feet long, 21 feet wide, and from 4 to 8 feet deep, is said to be the second largest swimming pool in any club in the United States. It is larger than the swimming pool in the University Club, which is one of the sights in club-land. The general design of the pool is in the character of the arbors at Capri and Sorrento. There is a marble platform, with marble seats, for guests who may be invited to watch the swimming contests and water polo games. The finish of all the bath rooms, dressing rooms, and manicure rooms will be of white marble and Pompeiian cement. A novel feature on this floor will be the "boot room." Members may put on slippers or house shoes when they enter the building, and send their footgear to the basement to be freshened up.

On the main floor are the offices, reading and writing rooms, library, lounging rooms, and tea rooms. The furnishings will be of the best, comfortable but without any attempt at showiness. In the rear of the library is a broad veranda 45 by 20 feet, which will be converted into a sun parlor in Winter. The large assembly room on the second floor, 72 by 25 feet, will be furnished in Louis XVI. style, and will be two stories high. This is in the front of the building. When it is used for dances or private theatricals it can be shut off from the rest of the clubhouse and be reached by private elevator. The dressing rooms and anterooms separate the assembly room from the gymnasium, which is in the rear on the same floor. The "gym," like the assembly, will extend the full width of the building, and be two stories high. The upper gallery will be devoted to a running track. The apparatus will be up-to-date in every respect.

The mezzanine floor contains committee rooms and dressing rooms, and also a locker room for the squash and handball courts on the floor above. The remainder of the fourth floor will be given up to bedrooms, which can be used as single rooms with bath, or in suites, as parlor, bedroom, and bath. They will be available for members only, and will be charged for at prevailing rates in any high-class hotel. The fifth floor is devoted to one large general restaurant and to private dining rooms, with fully equipped kitchens, pantries, butcher's shop, &c. Members may take friends to the general restaurant at any time, through the same private elevator as is use for the assembly room. In Summer there will be a restaurant in the roof garden extending across the entire front, with service rooms in connection with the kitchen. The building will be fireproof, with the most advanced system of lighting, heating, and ventilation. The architects say that the Colony Club is more diversely complete in arrangement than any men's club in America, not only as a social but as an athletic club.

The Woman's Club is not quite so pretentious in its ideas. The committee appointed to select a site for its new clubhouse is not ready to report yet, except to say that it will be somewhere in the neighborhood of the present quarters in East Forty-sixth Street. Plans are being worked out for a twelve-story building, to include a public restaurant, a gymnasium, a swimming pool, and club parlors. The top floors will be devoted to living apartments which members may rent by the year, with private service. In this way the club expects to materially increase its income. The Woman's Club is much broader in scope than the Colony Club. It has members in all parts of the United States and Canada. Its New York officers include Mrs. Henry G. Pfiffard, Mrs. Lewis Cruger Hasell, Mrs. Sam Sloan, Jr., Mrs. Henry M. Johnson, Mrs. William H. Rockwell, Mrs. H. Davis Ives, Mrs. Ernest H. Crosby, Mrs. John B. Claflin, Mrs. Cleveland H. Dodge, Mrs. Dallas Bache Pratt, and Mrs. Samuel B. Duryea, and Mrs. James L. Morgan of Brooklyn.

Mrs. Richard Irvin, Mrs. J. Pierpont Morgan, Mrs. Chauncey M. Depew, and several others are members of the Woman's Club as well as of the Colony Club. The modern club woman, as well as the modern clubman, needs more than one string to her bow. Mrs. Edwin Gould, Mrs. James W. Gerard, Mrs. Charles B. Alexander, Mrs. James Harriman, Mrs. C. Oliver Iselin, Mrs. A. D. Juilliard, Mrs. Lewis Cass Ledyard, Mrs. Seth Low, Mrs. Whitelaw Reid, Mrs. Russell Sage, Mrs. W. D. Sloane, Mrs. Buchanan Winthrop, and Mrs. C. F. Winthrop are among the New York members of this club. Mrs. Daniel Manning is one of the Albany members; Mrs. B. B. Odell, from Newburg; Mrs. John D. Archbold, from Tarrytown; Mrs. John G. Milburn, from Buffalo; Mrs. John Hay, Mrs. Algernon Sartoris, Mrs. G. B. Cortelyou, Mrs. H. C. Corbin, Mrs. A. R. Chaffee, and Mrs. George Dewey, from Washington; Mrs. S. Weir Mitchell and Mrs. Charles Wheeler, from Philadelphia; Mrs. Benjamin Thaw, from Pittsburg; Mrs. J. Ogden Armour and Mrs. H. C. Chatfield-Taylor, from Chicago; Mrs. Booth Tarkington, from Indianapolis; Mrs. Julia Ward Howe and Miss Alice Longfellow, from Boston; Mrs. Arthur T. Hadley, from New Haven; Mrs. Morgan G. Bulkeley, from Hartford; Mrs. Daniel C. Gilman, from Baltimore, and Mrs. William H. Crocker, from San Francisco.

This club will furnish shopping guides, and take particular care of young unmarried members who come to New York without an escort. Single bedrooms there, with the service, will not be more than $2 a night, with the attendance of a maid. Members may invite friends to a "high tea" on Sunday afternoons.

Justification for Modern Courses of Study.

OF THE recent criticisms of the course of study in the city's schools some have contained a sort of indictment of the whole scheme of elementary instruction as it exists to-day, and have called for a reversion to that older system we call the "three R's." The basis of this demand is that children of the present day are improperly graduated, that they cannot read, write, and cipher, and that the present system is fragmentary and incomplete.

It is agreed that every scheme of education must be practical—i. e., it must equip the child for the life he is to enter. Now the question is: Does any exclusive system of the three R's give the child that equipment?

It means nothing to call one set of studies "essentials" and another "fads and frills." That is merely a sort of argument by epithet. Now the "three R's" are undoubtedly essentials. But are these the only essentials? Are there not other relations than those of quantity? Must we know only how to say? Must we not also know what to say and what to do as well?

We believe that the schools should graduate pupils who can spell, cipher, read, and write. From a comparison of conditions two decades ago and to-day we are willing to affirm that there has been no retrogression in this respect.

But in the other essentials there has been a great advance. In the ability clearly and definitely to state what he knows, in the unaided expression of his own thought through oral and written composition, the present public school pupil is far ahead of his predecessor of twenty years ago. No longer is such composition the work of some one particularly gifted child, but of whole classes of children.

Manual training supplements the older form of teaching. A child learns numerical relations through things he himself measures, and in this finished work the creations of his mind receive their final test of concrete reality.

Would any one substitute for the memorized gems of poetry or the simpler masterpieces of English literature in higher grades, the old school reader, hallowed though it may be by tender associations? Shall the physical exercise of the classroom and gymnasium be omitted? Is the care of the body also a "fad"?

The simple truth is that the old "R's" system is a survival of a time quite different from our own. Practice in a trade through the apprentice system then completed the boy's education. But that system has disappeared, and in place of those simpler conditions there have arisen many industrial activities involving countless new methods of production and transportation. It might very fairly be inferred that any scheme of instruction only partially suitable to a bygone period must be wholly inadequate to one that has so completely displaced it.

Moreover, the material of instruction is not a matter to be determined without some reference to the learning child. Selection, arrangement, and method must be measured by the learner's ability and interests. It is true that there is a theory that by compelling a child to do disagreeable things his mind will be "hardened" and his will "strengthened," and that in time he will learn to love disagreeable work for its own sake. But it is a theory that is not vindicated in practice and one which is founded on a rather fanciful analogy between mind and muscle.

The fatigue and disgust resulting from the study of purely formal subjects have actually been quoted as merits of the system. For the desire for concrete instruction and for the knowledge of real things there was substituted under the older system a dull, grinding drill in abstractions hammered into the memory only through a wearisome series of uninteresting repetitions, and with so little content that there could be few proper associations. What the child learned was intangible or dull. He was directed to reason deductively from premises which for him were nothing but words. Under such methods even geography and history, the richest of contest studies, became a dreary nomenclature or an empty chronology; even the child's progress was measured by his ability to repeat words—a tendency yet evidenced by certain kinds of examinations.

Properly taught, the "fads and frills" emphasize experience as related either to what is newly perceived or to what has already been learned. Moreover, a child reasons from what he knows. Thus, through this closer adaptability to mental processes, these studies react favorably on the methods of teaching both form and content subjects.

There is a third advantage in the introduction of "fads and frills," which is perhaps the most important. Except in some of the reading lessons, the old form studies had no ethical content. This does not mean that there was no training in the old schools. Then, as always, there were the influence of the conscientious teacher, the cultivation of the school virtues found in all properly organized schools, and the insistence on neatness, accuracy, regularity, and obedience, vital as all these were, they were nevertheless extraneous to the material of instruction. Nature study, literature, and music all arouse the emotions; it is a necessary condition of manual work that action keep pace with thought and realization with imagination. Thus, through the creation of finer incentives and the necessity of performance, there must be a development of character.

To summarize, the "fads and frills" are necessary to complete education for these reasons:

1. Unless the object of instruction be to make mediocre clerks and bookkeepers, the three R's are unsuited, and modern conditions—on the other hand, the "fads and frills"—are more practical, in that they more closely relate the child to the industrial life he is to enter.

2. The "fads and frills" are necessary to the growing child, as they are better adapted to his mental development and his interests. The application of the elementary laws of psychology to education has followed their addition to the curriculum, and there has been a corresponding improvement in method.

3. The "fads and frills" have given to the course of study an ethical content not only for the information which they yield, but because of the emotions they arouse and the manual effort they require.

It is true that the present course of study is faulty in some respects; it is now passing through a period of adjustment that will doubtless produce a better course. Yet, whatever its faults may be, it is correct in its emphasis on a variety of subjects and occupations as opposed to a never-ending verbal drill on a few isolated abstractions. The Principals' Club, an organization of elementary school principals, has already expressed itself as favoring the more extended course. This action is unquestionably in harmony with the best opinion of those educators who believe that the first requisite of an educational scheme is EFFICIENCY.

Pity the Railroad Information Bureau Man

It Takes a Man with More Than Job's Patience to Stand the Strain--Must Be Able to Answer 500 Questions a Minute if Need Be.

WHEN the individual man or woman asserts himself or herself strongly the weary world becomes alert. It laughs or weeps, and then rolls along, soon to forget the diverting scene witnessed in the theatre, home, or street. But a day at the Bureau of Information in a great railway station affords an experience long remembered.

The average untutored traveler, venturing fearfully from his well-known paths, is rendered wholly irresponsible, with results often incredible. The union stations of our larger cities are perpetually interesting in this particular, but possibly the most humorous and pathetic extremes are to be observed in cosmopolitan New York. Instead of a tiresome psychological analysis of the distorted mind en route, this mirror is offered, wherein one can see human nature rampant, and behold the compound essence of foolishness, as well as the quintessence of mental misery.

"Is this—is this—the Information Bureau?" she panted, hurling her large bulk against the rail, seemingly so placed to protect the patient men behind it. Long coping with traveler's idiosyncrasies has made verbal misers of these unformed men, who, individually, answer as many as 500 questions an hour at the New York Grand Central Station. The man addressed pointed wearily in reply to a bold sign over his head.

\+ \+ \+

"Oh, of course. But am I too late for the train?"

"Which one, Madam? We have hundreds a day."

"Why, the one to Detroit, of course. Has it—oh, there it goes! Stop it!" But as she sprawled over her telescope he found time to assure her that the disappearing train was not bound for Detroit.

"Are you going over the Michigan Central?"

"Certainly not," she replied witheringly. "This is the Grand Central, isn't it?"

"That's the name of the station. The Michigan Central is your road. Next train at 10:15."

"What! None before that?"

"No, none before the next," and he shot a sly wink in reply to a sympathetic grin he caught in the crowd. As the woman hesitated she was swept aside.

"This a free day at Sing Sing Prison?" shrilly inquired the next woman. "Got three hours to wait, so thought I might stop over."

"Admittance always free at Sing Sing," was the half smiling reply. "Next train at 10:10."

"Oh, pshaw!" she exclaimed, glancing at the clock. "Is that the right time? Yes? Thanks. Guess I'll go down town. But say, who sells the best soda, Wanamaker or Siegel Cooper's?"

"Time table, there, quick!" here interrupted a masculine voice.

"What one? We have several," and the martyr swept his hand in the direction of racks containing thousands, and representing every road and branch in the country.

"I want to get to Rickett's Hollow."

"Wrong station, Sir; Jersey Central's your road. In a moment, Madam. Billy, take care of this lady," and he turned to a jingling telephone.

"How long is what?" this at the instrument. "Oh, Erie Canal. Well, really, Madam—you're a what? Oh, I see, a school teacher. Three hundred sixty-five and a half miles. No, we have no statistics on the new Simplon tunnel yet. Good-bye."

"That's the best to-day," he observed, as he hung up the receiver. "But it's nothing unusual."

So runs the world en route. Five hundred questions an hour! Twenty-five thousand a day! This is the record of the six men to whom a multitude daily refers as to a compendium of all human knowledge. Though employed to answer questions only on travel, these quick-witted men are hourly tested on the whole gamut of general information.

"You seem to suffer the brunt of the traveler's whims," observed the writer to Edward Bradley, the head of the bureau.

"Do we! Well, if I was to tell you what happened here you wouldn't believe it. The fool things women say and do—and men, too—are astonishing. Just stand around here and listen. Six men, four 'phoned—all busy as ants in a sugar bowl. I—"

"Give me a time table," demanded a woman at this point, pursing her mouth severely as she glanced over her spectacles.

"Where are you going, madam?"

"That's my business, Sir."

"But we have many time tables."

"Well, I'm going to Bethel, since you insist. I suppose it's one of the rules of the company."

"Which Bethel?"

"Young man, I didn't come here to be cross-examined."

"But there are three, Madam. In Vermont, New Hampshire, and Connecticut."

"Why, it's Bethel—Bethel, Connecticut—no, New Hampshire—well, I declare," this reflectively.

"Have you been there? Are there mountains around?" suggested the man.

"Young feller, you talk too much. You're impudent. I shall return to my husband and have him report you," and she marched away.

\+ \+ \+

"Fair sample, that," observed the patient man. "They all think we are mind-readers. But just listen to Billy. He's got a good one at the 'phone.

"Ties in the Albany Bridge!" he was exclaiming. "Oh, I understand; the number. Very sorry, madam, but none of us have ever counted them. Good-bye."

"Now, wouldn't that jar you?" he said, as he left the telephone. "You see, she had a dispute about it, and wanted us to settle it. Pretty near as bad as the man who wanted to find out how many revolutions a driving wheel made in a mile. Told him I was too busy to figure it out. Then he wanted me to make an estimate on the number in a day. I satisfied him with a good fat number in the trillions, and he left. We have two kinds come here—the excited and the foolish. The latter sit around here with nothing to do, so think up nonsensical questions. Tell him about your moonlight girl, Ed."

"Wish you could have seen her," began the head of the bureau. "She came up here very shy, and waited a long time before she said anything. Then, getting me over here at the side, she says, 'Do you think it will be moonlight on the Hudson River on the 15th of next month?' 'Well,' I says, looking over the calendar, 'There's a moon scheduled for these parts on that date.' 'And is it a full one?' she says anxiously. 'Yes,' I says, looking at the calendar again. 'Oh, I'm so thankful,' she exclaims, just as if I was running the moon. 'But it might be cloudy that night,' she suddenly pouts. 'It might,' I says. 'Oh, can't you possibly tell me for sure? You see, I'm going up the river by boat for my wedding trip, and I do so want it moonlight. You'll make a special effort to find out, won't you?' Now that sounds impossibly foolish, but that's just the way she said it, didn't she, Billy? They'll ask anything. You never can tell.

\+ \+ \+

"Give me a ticket! Quick! I must catch my train!" exclaimed a man, throwing a bill at the six men collectively. Now this man is doubtless method personified in his apothecary shop or grocery, but in the race against time he closely resembles the candidate for the cell with the soft sides.

"Ticket on what road and where?"

"Quick! I haven't time to talk. On the Central to Buffalo."

"You can't buy tickets here. There's your window across the room," and away he scooted.

Had you told this man an hour before that he was thus to make himself ridiculous he would have considered himself insulted. It is only the long experienced traveler who instills rational action into his zeal for annihilating time and space when on the road.

Americanitis—our chronic time disease—crops out constantly at the Bureau of Information. "What's the quickest way to Cleveland—St. Louis—San Francisco?" is the question of the moment. While every American inquires for the shortest time schedule, his persistence in following it out reveals his wage or salary earning capacity. If a wage-earner he will not pay an extra $5 to ride on a flier, but will fume until the next fastest train that does not demand a bonus. The high-salaried man, however, whose minutes are dollars, does not hesitate at this outlay. Thus we see a curious contrast to India, where the natives who earn but a few cents a day patiently wait through half the circuit of the sun for a certain train. One of the best times to see the enraged American traveler is during a general tie-up through heavy snows. Then his overflowing human nature is the despair of even the hardened information men, from whom he vainly seeks satisfaction.

"Wie viel clocks to Troy?" presently asked a foreigner in shattered English.

"How many clocks to Troy? Train leaves at 1:40. Don't understand? Here Gus, take care of this German." The interpreter speaks nine languages and makes short work of hundreds of bewildered immigrants daily.

\+ \+ \+

"That fellow reminds me of an Irishman who had just arrived and didn't want to confess it," related one of the men. "'And how do I get to 227 South Street, Connecticut?' he asked. 'Well, whereabouts in Connecticut?' I says. 'It's a big place you know.' 'Of course I know, an' so is New York,' he grins. 'But what town?' I says. 'Faith, now, do you think I'd be after tellin' the likes of you? Must think I just come over, and am the easy one. No, Sir,' and he walked away, wagging his head knowingly. But here's trouble. I can recognize it every time," and he turned to a precise woman who was carefully depositing her valuables as if for a protracted stay.

"I want to get to San Francisco," she slowly began, emphasizing her words with her index finger, "and by a route absolutely void of snow. Absolutely, do you understand?"

"The southern trip from St. Louis will suit you in that particular, Madam."

"Very well, now when do I leave here?"

"Ten in the morning."

"Put that down."

With a look of "I'm in for it" he secured pencil and paper.

"Yes."

"Put that down."

"Lower berth?"

"If you apply in time."

"Put that down."

"When do I get to St. Louis?"

"Twelve the next day."

"Put that down."

"When do I leave there?"

"At four."

"Put that down."

"How many hours is that?"

"Four."

"Might as well put that down, too."

"Is there a check room for parcels there?"

"Yes."

"Put that down."

"How much?"

"Ten cents a parcel."

"Put that down." Throughout the whole itinerary it was "Put that down," from the Atlantic to the Pacific. After fifteen minutes' hard work the schedule was completed. Meditatively she glanced at the half-yard of notes.

\+ \+ \+

"Well, now," she finally said, "do you suppose there is much snow, after all, on the central route? I've always wanted to see Kansas. Not very much snow now, is there? No? Yes, I think I'll go by way of Chicago, after all."

To the dismay of the Information Bureau she began a new séance of "Put that down."

"Corker, ain't she?" laughed the chief after she had gone. "Ought to have been here last week. She was the dotty one for keeps. 'I've noticed a beautiful cat around the station," she says to me; 'can I get a picture of it at this bureau?' 'A beautiful cat?' I says, a bit puzzled. 'Yes, there it is now, by the door. Isn't it beautiful?' It was the homeliest stray cat that ever happened, but very prompt I says, 'Yes, beautiful, indeed'; anything, you see, rather than start a debate with a woman. 'No, Madam, we have no picture of that cat here.' 'But perhaps the newsstand has,' she suggested. 'You might ask,' I says, shaking like a bowl of jelly as she waltzed away. Pretty soon she comes sailing by. 'I understand I can get one at the general manager's office,' she smiles to me; 'oh, I am so glad.' But pretty soon I see her sitting over on one of the benches looking kind of thoughtful, and I think, between you and me and the door-knob, that the manager gave her a bit of advice."

"I see in this here folder," finally drawled a backwoodsman, after a period of unwonted sanity on the part of the public, "that the Central House in Buffalo is a good hotel. Now, how far do you reckon it be from the station?"

"Doesn't it say in that folder?"

"Nope. Just says it's opposite the station," whereupon the information dispenser sat down and shook his head in despair. But the parade of the ridiculous did not cease.

"What time is the special song service at All Souls' Church next Sunday afternoon? Quick! I must catch my train." So excited was the woman who demanded this information that all her words blended into one prolonged screech.

"I don't know, Madam; it's not on our line."

"But why don't you know?" she cried, running backward to the door. "What are you here for? You're incompetent, and should be reported. Outrageous. And—" but the closing of the door terminated the philippic.

"Get reported often?" the Chief of the Bureau was asked.

"Oh yes, but not so often as you would think, to hear them threaten. Though we are always getting reported, we can't ever report the public. Now, isn't that a queer fix for things?

"Yes, this is a great place to study human nature," reflectively continued the chief. "This bureau is really a testing ground, for it brings out what's right down at the bottom of a person's soul. They say that when a man's drunk he shows his real self. And so it is here when they get excited. Though the most of 'em lose their heads when trying to catch trains, the true lady or gentleman will still be such, no matter how much befuddled he or she may be.

\+ \+ \+

"It's curious how travelers think this place is a combination of everything. Try to make me the Father Confessor for the woman with the matrimonial troubles; doctor for the sick; pawnbroker for the busted; minister to settle Biblical disputes; court of last resort for cabbies and their 'fares'; in short, general encyclopedia on everything the sun ever hoped to shine on.

"Give a bit of advice to the public when about to take a trip? No, I won't attempt that. But for the sake of the profession, which in one way and another does quite a bit for several million travelers every year, for the sake of the profession, I ask that the public bear in mind that while we know a few things we don't know it all."

NEW TRUTHS CLINCHED BY MODERN PARABLES

He that soweth the seed may live to be felled by the tree of his own planting.

THE candidate had convinced the great concourse of voters that he would be their next Governor. The magnetism of his pleasing personality was resistless. The people believed him. As the candidate's train glided out of the little town there was much cheering, music, and shrieking of whistles. A strange vibration now startled the beaming aspirant as he contemplated his bright and glowing future. He smiled sweetly, however, when told that coins were being flattened by his car—souvenirs which a proud constituency would revere and pass down from generation to generation as mementos of a good and great Executive.

Quietly, one November day, the fateful ballots fell. They were counted and the confident candidate was found wanting in indorsements.

"I have made friends," said he, "and I shall go among them and sell books."

One morning there arrived in a certain town a book agent, who, strange to relate, was received with a warm welcome. He was delighted with his reception and the number of persons who subscribed for his books was most gratifying.

A week later the former [illegible] delivered the books and his admirers paid promptly. But the bank would not receive his deposit, and the candidate was left to meditate over a motley pile of mutilated money.

In moments of misery a little reflection will give a suffering mortal cause for congratulation.

MARSHALL P. WILDER tells of a New England merchant, who, accompanied by his devoted wife, went to the St. Louis Exposition with the avowed purpose of having a good time. The gentleman struck the Pike. An arduous application to a developing business had deprived him of much pleasure in his younger days, and he determined to visit all the tempting palaces of amusement. His wife, however, entered a protest against a number of the entertainments.

Some of the attractions advertised were too suggestive of an entrance to the broad path which leadeth to destruction and eternal damnation.

The merchant was grievously disappointed, for his discerning wife had drawn the restrictive lines altogether too tightly.

He prevailed upon her to enter a certain building, where, by a unique arrangement of mirrors, the image of a single individual was reflected a hundred times. The hour was early and there were no other visitors in this mystic maze.

"Here, Ellen," shouted the disgruntled merchant, imperiously, as he seated himself upon the only chair, "kindly stand in front of me a moment."

"What now?" she asked, curtly, taking the position indicated.

"I was thinking," answered the husband, forlornly, as he peeped upon the many reflections of his rigorous wife, "what a miserable time a Mormon would have at this fair."

Grim death may stir to life the dormant wit which a lifetime's effort has failed to rouse.

KING XENATORES had all the advantages of wealth, wisdom, and power, yet possessed not wit, and therefore greatly envied his Court jester.

The jester had conscientiously and prayerfully endeavored to endue his master with a spirit of humor. But the resulting efforts of the King fell flat and evoked only the mechanical smiles of groveling courtiers. Melancholy soured the King and worry emaciated the jester.

One day fever touched the Court fool's brow and Death knocked unceremoniously on his chamber door. The poor jester wept—his life's work had been a disappointment. Faithfully he had tried to arouse a spark of humor in his master's unresponsive soul, but he had failed dismally.

Death tarried for a moment to give the sorrowing King an opportunity to bid farewell to his loyal entertainer. Tearfully his Majesty gazed upon the withered face; he removed his crown, stooped, and kissed the wrinkled brow.

"Poor fellow," uttered the weeping monarch, "he is, alas, at his wits' end!"

Instantly joy lighted the jester's face. He knew now that his life had not been lived in vain, and chuckled as grim Death entered to claim his own.

By not emulating an illustrious predecessor in all details, a man sometimes may lengthen his days in the land.

THE Rev. Cyrus Searles was blessed with a goodly portion of this world's goods. He lived in the suburbs and traveled to and from his church in an automobile.

One Sabbath morning the assembling congregation was shocked by a loud explosion. A panic was imminent, but was averted, fortunately, by the trembling sexton, who rushed up on the pulpit platform and, with uplifted hand, demanded quiet.

"Friends," said the aged church officer, quivering with emotion, "be not frightened. Our dear pastor's chariot has gone up in fire, but I am pleased to inform you that, unlike Elijah of old, he did not go up with it."

\+ \+ \+

The tickling of a straw gives to some more keen delight than does the complimentary word of appreciative genius.

THE great sculptor, in whose honor the diplomats of nations had assembled, allowed his eyes to follow the movements of an attractive, fascinating young woman. Admirers surrounded her, and fragrant flatteries were poured into a most willing ear.

The sculptor stepped into this midst, and as he did so the circle of gallants spread out thinly as does placid water acknowledge the dropping of an object which possesses weight.

"Madame," said the genius impressively and earnestly, "permit [illegible] you are one of the most perfect of God-made creatures."

The eyes that had beamed with pleasure now turned cold, and a pallor lodged in the cheeks where roses had just lingered. She made a chilly response and stepped aside, as though fearful of being touched by the white garments of the angel of death.

Later in the season a page picture in a magazine of fashion attracted her attention, she recognized her own features, and through the tears of gratitude which welled in her eyes, the proud beauty read: "This season's most fascinating tailor-made girl."

\+ \+ \+

Not all the effusions prompted by love come from the heart; some come direct from the head.

THERE was not the slightest trace of flattery in Howard Dithrige's words when he told the sweet maiden whom he had been bidding good-night for an hour that her beauty and grace were enough to make a firmer man than he miss the last night car and be compelled to walk home.

So pleased was the girl with this sentiment [illegible] her admirer a tranquil-dant. She explained that in yonder meadow she was accustomed, in the early morning hours, to wander barefooted, and there absorb nature's free and exhilarating tonic.

Some weeks later Howard Dithridge was ill. His mother sent for the doctor, and that gruff individual found his patient in the midst of a series of violent sneezes. His eyes were swollen, face flushed, and nose moist and of a dark red hue.

"Hay fever," grunted the physician. "Here's a prescription; have it filled and then—" addressing the distressed mother and pointing to a vase on the mantel, "have that tuft of withered grass thrown out of the window. Can't expect health in a room filled with decaying vegetation."

Old Diogenes went pottering about in daylight with a lantern.

"What's wrong, old man?" the people asked. "Are you looking for something?"

"Sure, I'm looking for a man. I want to find the Man Higher Up, what George Bernard Shaw calls 'Superman,' I guess."

But at that a riot ensued, the reserves came out on the run with night sticks, and the people barreled the old [illegible] up forever, for fear he might spoil

SOCIETY AT HOME AND ABROAD

THE outdoor season began with the 1st of May, and for the past week there has been a series of interesting and brilliant events, one succeeding the other rapidly. The weather has been perfect, and consequently helped much to make a success of the three important episodes—the meet of the Ladies' Four-in-Hand Driving Club, the opening of Belmont Park and of the new clubhouse there, and the coaching parade. Thursday on Long Island was a gala day, and it ended fittingly with the large dance given at Harbor Hill by Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Mackay in honor of August Belmont.

This week the house party is in the ascendant and the Spring life in the suburbs has begun in earnest. Bernardsville and Morristown are gay, as are also Tuxedo, Westchester, and, of course, the Meadow Brook colony. The hunting is at an end, and the polo is about to begin. It is nearly time for the open-air horse shows. Brooklyn and Orange and other adjacent places are to have these entertainments.

The ships still continue to cross the Atlantic with well-filled passenger lists, although many have postponed their sailings from one date to another, and the bookings published are frequently misleading. Among those going abroad soon are Mr. and Mrs. Storrs Wells and Miss Wells. The wedding of Miss Nathalie Wells and Harry Peters, which was to have been at Newport in June, has been postponed, owing to the ill-health of Mrs. Wells. It will take place later in the season.

This coming week has few weddings and none of great importance. The first gathering of society will be on the occasion of the marriage of Miss MacAfee and Lewis Butler Preston, which will take place at St. Thomas's in town on the 16th. Miss MacAfee will have a matron and a maid of honor, but no bridesmaids, and Mr. Preston an array of ushers from New York and Philadelphia. On June 1 there will be two weddings of much interest to society. One is that of Miss Wilmerding and Mr. Phelps at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. John Magee Elsworth, in town, and the other that of Mrs. Bernard Eekhout, daughter of Mrs. McNamee and the granddaughter of Jacob Vanderbilt, and John Morton at Staten Island.

The ocean races will be the next important out of door event, although during the rest of the meeting Belmont Park will be the gathering place of society. The entertainments in May at Meadow Brook and its vicinity will be informal in character. This Sunday every residence is crowded with guests for the week end.

In town this week there will be two entertainments for charitable purposes which are of much interest. One of these will be the tableaux in aid of the widows and orphans of Japanese soldiers, which will be given at the Belasco Theatre on the afternoon of May 12. These will be most interesting and original. Mrs. Hugh Fraser, widow of the British envoy to the Court of Japan and the sister of Marion Crawford, will supervise them. On Thursday there was a meeting of the patronesses and their friends at the home of Mrs. Robert Minturn, in Gramercy Park, at which Mrs. Fraser and Dr. Takamine, who had charge of the Japanese exhibit at St. Louis, spoke. The other entertainment will be given on May 10 at the Carnegie Lyceum. It will be the final performance of the Climbers' Dramatic Club and three short plays will be presented.

Mrs. T. J. Oakley Rhinelander is to sail shortly for Europe. She will remain all Summer. Mrs. J. Todhunter Thompson will sail on May 27. Miss Elizabeth Remsen passes the Summer in Europe. Miss Julia Chester Wells will also take her yearly trip abroad. Miss Anita Sands and W. H. Sands are booked to go abroad for a short season.

+ + +

Mr. and Mrs. George Gould, as already announced, sail this week for Europe. Miss Helen Gould has opened her house at Irvington-on-Hudson and Mr. and Mrs. Frank Gould will take a long cruise in their yacht during the Summer. Mr. and Mrs. R. T. Wilson start shortly for Newport, where they are to open their villa for the Summer. Mrs. Robert Remsen and Miss Remsen will be at New London, Conn., this year. Mrs. Lindlay Hoffman Chapin and her mother, Mrs. George Andrews, go to Lake George.

William E. Iselin will make a May cruise in the Emerald, and later join the New York Yacht Club in its annual outing. Col. and Mrs. William Jay will be at their place at Bedford in September and at Newport in August. Col. and Mrs. De Lancey Kane will be at Newport, but owing to Mrs. Kane's being in mourning they will not entertain. Mr. and Mrs. Woodbury Kane have opened their cottage at Newport.

Lakewood has closed its season and Mr. and Mrs. Gould, before going abroad, have been paying a visit to Mr. and Mrs Stuyvesant Fish at Washington. Miss Wells is also a guest of Mrs. Stuyvesant Fish this week. Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Iselin have also been in Washington, where, on account of the Railroad Congress, there has been more than the usual amount of entertaining. Miss Roosevelt was in town on Thursday, but she came from Brookline, where she visited her grandmother, Mrs. Lee. Among Mrs. Fish's guests at one of her large dinners last week was her sister-in-law, Mrs. Nicholas Fish, who has been making her home in Washington this Winter. Mrs. Stuyvesant Fish has given her sister-in-law's name on her invitation list as "Mrs. Fish," thus gracefully yielding the precedence to the wife of the older member of the family. In this way also is Mrs. Robert Goelet known as Mrs. Goelet, while her sister-in-law is Mrs. Ogden Goelet. There is some curiosity now that the Burdens have made up their family differences after litigations of twenty years or more, as to whether Mrs. James A. Burden will be known as Mrs. Burden and her sister-in-law as Mrs. I. Townsend Burden only.

Mrs. Ogilvie Haig sails very shortly for Europe, having terminated her visit to her sister, Mrs. Orme Wilson. Mrs. Wilson entertained quietly for her, but there have been no large dinners given, owing possibly to the lateness of the season.

Many friends have been glad during the past week to see Miss Ada Acosta, the sister of Mrs. Philip Lydig, driving in the Park. She and Mrs. Lydig have been out on several of the fine afternoons, and she is rapidly getting better. She may visit Mrs. Lydig at Newport in the Summer, although there have been plans made for her going abroad.

The Hot Springs of Virginia has been the place chosen for passing the honeymoon. There have been quite a number of the young couples there who were married Easter week. Mr. and Mrs. De Witt Clinton Falls, Mr. and Mrs. Livingston Flanagan, and Mr. and Mrs. J. Roberts Coffin are among them. Mr. and Mrs. Forsyth Wickes are at Tuxedo and several others have gone abroad. Mr. and Mrs. Oliver H. P. Belmont will be at the Hot Springs a part of the Summer, as they are interested in planning their new home there.

Mr. and Mrs. John R. Drexel are yet in town, but they intend to go to Newport by June. Astor, the son of the first John Jacob Astor, finished his education abroad, and for some years toured Europe under the guidance of de Bunsen, the famous ancestor of the present diplomat. Ex-Commodore Nicholson Kane, who is a direct descendant of the first John Jacob Astor, is a Cambridge man, and there are others of the family in different generations who have been to various English and Continental schools and universities. Col. John Jacob Astor was educated at St. Paul's and afterward went to Harvard, but he did not matriculate.

in the illness of M. Paderewski. At the last moment it was decided not to give the concert at Mrs. Hammond's, although at one time, when it was found that M. Paderewski could not play, it was hoped that Josef Hofmann would be able to take his place. M. The tennis matches at the St. Nicholas Rink continue to be an attraction with society, and the audiences are large, taking a deep interest in the contestants. The two other amateur sporting events of the week took place on Wednesday and yesterday afternoon, and were the parade of the Ladies' Four-in-Hand Driving Club and the Coaching Parade. The latter is reviewed in another column. The Ladies' Club had an ideal day for their parade, and Central Park was crowded to see them go by. Mr. and Mrs. Eldridge T. Gerry and the Misses Gerry will go to Europe within the fortnight. They will arrive at Newport on [illegible] among the villas to be closed this season.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank Sturgis will move by next Winter to their new residence in the Sixties. Mr. and Mrs. H. C. Frick will not get into their Vanderbilt residence for some time. The Pope has been receiving little deputations of New York society. Recently it was J. Pierpont Morgan and his party and on Wednesday Mrs. Ogden Mills, the Misses Mills, Ogden Mills, Miss Evelyn Burden, and Miss Cavendish Bentinck were received in audience. Rome is gay indeed, and filled with Americans who were present at the Easter ceremonies. Sicily, which is now one of the objective points of a Spring tour, has also been well patronised by New Yorkers. Dr. Rainsford is there now, and the Drexels, who were in Venice last week, have set sail for the same place, revisiting it. They were there a few weeks ago, but have a large party on board who were taken on at Venice.

Mr. and Mrs. George Vanderbilt have been having a series of splendid entertainments at Biltmore. They have been for charity, and have not been in the nature of private functions, as Mrs. Vanderbilt was in mourning for her cousin, Mr. Barker. One of the beneficiaries at the Biltmore Charity Concert was the Clarence Barker Memorial Hospital. The late Clarence Barker, another brother of Mrs. Rathbone Bacon, was a composer and musician of note. On Wednesday Mrs. Vanderbilt lost her grandmother, the venerable Mrs. Edward King of Newport and New York, who gave a handsome donation last year to the Cathedral of St. John the Divine. Mrs. King lived at Newport for many years, and her home, a Colonial residence, has been subsequently occupied by Barger the restaurateur. Mrs. Vanderbilt was Miss Dresser. The Dresser children lived with their grandmother, being orphans. The family consisted of Mrs. George Grenville Merrill, the Viscountess D'Osmay, Mrs. Nicholas Brown, Mrs. George Vanderbilt, and Le Roy Dresser. Mrs. King was a Miss Le Roy, the descendant of one of the oldest and best-known families in New York society. She also leaves one son, George Gordon King.

Robert Scoville will be the best man, and the ushers selected [illegible] Lanahan of New York, and Roland S. Morris and S. Boyer Davis of Philadelphia. Mr. Little is a Princeton graduate, Class of '96.

PERSONAL AND OTHERWISE.

THE souvenirs given by Mrs. Forsyth Wickes (Miss Marion Arnot Haven) to her attendants at her wedding, and worn by them, were novel in that they were formed of riding crops in gold studded with amethysts and having on the centre of each crop a horseshoe, perhaps an inch long, in gold set with pearls. These were sent the girls in horseshoe shaped boxes of white kid with the horseshoe shape outlined with amethyst colored lines.

Mrs. Archibald Stevens Alexander (Miss Helen Tracy Barney) gave her attendants fine short neckchains of gold to which were attached spray shaped pendants of gold, each set with several small diamonds. The latter bride wore an exquisite string of pearls, one of her wedding gifts, and the former wore a shirt chain or riviere of large diamonds and a very large, almost circular, corsage ornament or brooch of diamonds, the centre of which was an emerald cabochon about an inch across, the whole ornament being about two inches in diameter.

Miss Julia Lorillard Edgar, now Mrs. Richard H. Williams, Jr., wore a riviere of diamonds to which was attached an enormous almost pear-shaped sapphire set in diamonds, the pendant being a gift of the bridegroom. Her souvenirs to her attendants were gold bracelets set with emeralds.

The latest thing in collars for the smart dog comes from Paris and is painted white to represent the shape of a man's collar, and is tied with a bow of any colored ribbon one fancies. One such has an emerald green cravat bow. It is doubtful if there is more than one of these latest fancies in town, and this was sent over by a New Yorker now in Paris to one of her family for her pet dog. Dogs seem to be quite the rage just now in Paris, and at a recent luncheon given there Copenhagen china dogs were used as table decorations. One was an almost life-size King Charles spaniel in natural colors, and the others were miniature hounds. These were placed in a solid bed of violets and roses that extended to the edges of the plates upon which the luncheon was served.

In Paris they are "painting the lily," or rather coloring the violet artificially in order to have even these exquisite flowers show new tints. The shade given these violets is described as a mauve red, or reddish purple. These are deemed to make an agreeable contrast when arranged within baskets with the clear purple of the Parma violet and the pure white variety; yellow violets are not mentioned. It seems passing strange that the beautiful yellow violet is not cultivated. In Paris also blue carnations and hydrangeas are shown in the florists's windows, for blue is one of the smart colors of the season there.

The Princess Christian is to have a motor, and it is to be a twenty-four-horse-power Thorneycroft. She has just come to this decision, and, of course, also decided to have her car English built. It will be done in the royal colors, blue, with white lines, and is to be a double landaulette, with the body completely covered and the chauffeur's seat at the front. The sides will have large windows and a glass screen and canopy will protect the chauffeur. The English royal family leads in the matter of motors other Courts, and the King has more cars in his garages than any other monarch, indeed, he was one of the first to take up motoring. The Queen is also to have this year a petrol-driven motor car. The Kings of Italy and Spain, however, are the only crowned heads who actually run their own motor cars, the latter being an ardent student of mechanism, the motor not being the only piece of mechanism to interest him. Prince Henry, the Kaiser's brother, has a fad for visiting factories where automobiles are manufactured in order to witness their construction. The Kaiser was the first crowned head to patronize motor races, and this of course boomed the game in Germany.

Mrs. Harrison, who writes under the pen name of Lucas Malet, and who is a daughter of the late Canon Kingsley, has left London, and is having built for her a home in a secluded portion of her father's old parish. Mrs. Harrison has not been a strong woman since the writing of "The History of Sir Richard Calmady." Many of the scenes in this novel exhausted her in the writing, as she lives what she writes, and is easily overcome by strong passages. Mrs. Harrison is scientific in her mode of writing in that she does not begin a novel until she has a complete scenario arranged, and her story once planned out she does not permit her characters to step aside from the paths laid out for them. For four years Mrs. Harrison has suffered more or less from ill-health, and her latest work, now about three-quarters written, will probably not appear till the late Autumn or early Winter. It deals with the experiences of a foreigner in London in middle-class society.

Mrs. Harrison's novels are partially dictated and partially written by herself, depending upon her mood and the scene. She revises very carefully, sometimes correcting ten times before the completed manuscript is ready, but it then requires no revision, or, at the most, very little change. The original manuscripts of her novels are bound and preserved. When she writes she usually does so with an old and much battered silver pen.

The Duchess of Marlborough has returned to London. In England she is considered reserved in manner and kind at heart, to be specially fond of little children, to show consideration for her servants, and to care for the poor. One of her fads is the collecting of handsomely bound books, and she has had designed for them a beautiful bookplate. In her boudoir at Blenheim Palace, is an unusually fine collection of miniatures, including those of Marie de Medici and Mary Queen of Scots. She is credited with [illegible] property in England dignified with the name of palace. It has wonderful rose gardens, and a rose covered pergola, with many fine fountains in the garden. There is a large dining hall, and one reaches it through a suite of drawing rooms and a long corridor, gorgeous in gilt. Dinner guests pass to it between two lines of servants in the Churchill liveries, and much ceremony is maintained. In the evenings music and bridge are the chief amusements.

The English have much sentiment about wedding veils, and that worn by Lady Shrewsbury, who at thirty-six was a grandmother, was also worn by her three daughters, Muriel Lady Helmsley, Lady Gwendolen Little, and Lady Londonderry, and by two granddaughters, Mrs. Gervase Beckett and Lady Helen Satordale. The latter bride also had in her wedding bouquet a bit of myrtle grown from a slip that in 1875 had formed a part of Lady Londonderry's bridal bouquet, and which was planted immediately afterward. Lady Helen was married in 1902, or twenty-seven years from the date of the planting of the original sprig. The Jerseys have an exquisite lace veil worn by the celebrated Sarah Lady Jersey in 1804, and this, just a hundred years later, in 1904, adorned Lady Dusany, daughter of the present Lord and Lady Jersey. The Hon. Mrs. Benjamin Bathurst wore a wedding veil that had also been worn by her grandmother, Lady Northwick, and her mother, Lady Edward Churchill. Miss Olive Van der Meulen, now Mrs. Thorold, wore at her wedding a lace veil formerly the property of ex-Queen Isabella of Spain.

Lord and Lady Orkney are on a Continental tour. Lady Orkney was the well-known Connie Gilchrist, who married the present Lord Orkney in 1892. She was married eleven years before she presented him with a child, Lady Mary Fitzmaurice, now two years of age. Lady Wenlock and Lady de Vesci, however, were each married seventeen years before children were born to them, and both of these children were girls.

Abbotsford, Sir Walter Scott's old home, has been leased for a term of years by the Marchioness of Bute, who has taken it from her kinswoman, the Hon. Mrs. Maxwell Scott, a great-granddaughter of the novelist and wife of a younger brother of Lord Herries. The River Tweed is but a few yards from Abbotsford, and the fishing is said to be uncommonly good.

Among the many amusing statements anent the parade of the Ladies' Four-in-Hand Driving Club of Wednesday last was one to the effect that each of the women whips had an expert man whip beside her on the boxseat, but that none of the aforesaid women whips found it necessary to ask the assistance of their skilled masculine guests in managing the horses. It would be interesting to know if Ambassador Reid, Charles T. Barney, Dr. Seward Webb, and H. McK. Twombly are "skilled whips." No one ever heard anything of the sort before, and doubtless they were as much surprised as any one if they read this statement. The truth is that the whips of the Four-in-Hand Driving Club are no whit behind their brethren of the Coaching Club in their ability skillfully to tool a coach and four through the Park, and the woman or girl who found it necessary in ordinary tooling to call for assistance is not likely to be a member of the club.

Another of the oft-repeated reports connected with this feminine club is or was that Miss Gladys Vanderbilt had been elected a member and would tool a coach in the parade. Miss Vanderbilt is not a member of the club, and one of its members says that she does not know that Miss Vanderbilt drives at all.

It is only within the past two years that the Ladies' Four-in-Hand Driving Club has been conspicuous; it certainly never wished to be, and as a matter of fact was in existence some time before the press got hold of it. A number of its members have never tooled coaches in the parade, but then not all of them are fortunate enough to own them.

Those who made their début as paraders this year were Miss Ruth Twombly, Miss Jean Reid, and Miss Adelaide Randolph. There were missing from this year's parade, who were present last, Mrs. Arthur Iselin, (Miss Eleanor Jay,) who is in mourning; Miss Cornelia Bryce, Miss Mary Harriman, Mrs. C. Ledyard Blair, and Mrs. W. Goadby Loew.

Last May Mrs. Hastings drove J. Henry Smith's coach, but Miss Jean Reid tooled it this year, a dark blue with lighter blue trimmings, the cornflowers used as decorations of the horses' headstalls and worn by the guests, making an effective color-scheme, as did also the masses of yellow marguerites worn by Miss Gulliver's guests with the yellow running gear and general yellow hue of her coach, which was relieved with dark green. Jonquils were used to decorate the horses. The gray leader on this coach was the only one of its kind in the parade. Miss Gulliver, who is the Secretary of the club and daughter of William C. Gulliver, Secretary of the Men's Coaching Club, sticks to the traditions of coaching, as does also Mrs. Arthur Iselin, daughter of Col. William Jay, President of the Coaching Club.

Mrs. Hastings tooled the old Republic coach built long ago for W. K. Vanderbilt, and used by him in both Europe and America. It is to be regretted that woman whips coif their hair in the most unbecoming fashion and wear homely hats. It was hard to recognize some of the whips; the small-featured, dark women had the best of it in this respect, as the get-up did not produce so complete an alteration in their looks. If each would dress her hair as she usually does and wear some sort of hat less rigid in outline, and of some decided color, brown, blue, green, or warm red, the attractiveness of coaching to lookers-on at least would be greatly enhanced. It is always a pity when good-looking women and girls dress so that they detract from rather than add to their natural charms.

There are certain color-harmonies which are [illegible]

Surrounding the tearoom were four booths; one, hung with Japanese lanterns and a profusion of yellow wistaria, was in charge of Miss Winifred Finch, who dispensed bonbons and Japanese sweetmeats; another booth, draped with flags, was under the supervision of Miss Montgomery, and there one could buy toothsome home-made cake. The third booth was a wistaria-laden fancy table, with Miss Bissell and Miss Agnes Kelly in attendance, and the fourth, built of parasols tastefully arranged, was looked after by Miss Dubois. For the entertainment of the guests there was singing by Miss Levenberg, who sang several delightful Japanese songs. All the young ladies who assisted wore quaint Oriental costumes.

President, was held on Thursday in the Waldorf, at 3 o'clock.

The meeting of Sorosis on Monday was devoted to education. Mrs. Caroline Childs Goldsmith was Chairman of the meeting. The subject of education was presented by Mesdames Laura Stuart, A. E. Lupton, J. L. Bates, and A. M. Scudder. There will be only one more meeting this season.

Followed by a well appointed and daintily served little luncheon, there was a most enjoyable card party on Tuesday evening in the apartments of Mrs. Slater, Hotel Ansonia. The party was a small but jolly one, arrangements being made for sixteen guests.

THE AMERICAN HUSBAND—IS HE A CHEERFUL GIVER?

THE American husband as he appears in all pen pictures, especially those drawn of him by foreign artists, is a most amiable being. His amiability and his head for business are all there is to him, according to these pictures, and he does not present a distinguished appearance. His one occupation is in making money to fill his pockets with copper, silver, or gold, according to the quality of his genius in that direction, and then to pour this into the lap of his wife at home to use as she may see fit. A number of women discussing the subject the other day asked each other if characteristics of this kind could be called National; if there was a National type, and if the ungenerous husband was not an individual frequently to be seen.

To illustrate, each had a story to tell. No woman told her own story—women are loyal to their families, and there was not one of those speaking who had not the best husband that ever lived, and the histories they had to relate were of acquaintances, friends, and relatives. They were of people of all classes of society, of all parts of the country, and of all degrees of wealth.

One of the first examples given is from the wealthiest class. The wife is young, beautiful, and apparently with everything to be desired in life. What can be more desired that wealth, beauty, and social position? Those are gifts of the fairy godmother in the fairy tales, only stated there a little more in detail for picturesque effect.

They could be enumerated in the same way here in the real life of millionaires—pearls and emeralds, a diamond crown—fairy-tale expression for a tiara—a beautiful house, a coach and four, pink cheeks, rosy lips, bright eyes, a table set with gold and silver. At the words, "Little goat, little table arise," or their equivalent in a modernized version, from below appears a sumptuous repast to disappear again when the appetite of the beautiful Princess is satisfied. It has all the appearance of the fairy tale, but it isn't.

Life for some of the fairy-tale heroines of modern days is not all champagne and wafers. The amount of money that this one handles, from the standpoint of the ordinary woman, is large. Relatively, according to the position she holds, it is pitifully small. To dress on that income requires tact and management. A certain number of gowns she gets every season abroad or of a smart modiste, but further than that she must rely upon the skill of her maid, and her tailor is a quiet little man of moderate prices. She has the income of one piece of real estate for her pocket money, and the amount fluctuates with conditions. But the sum is always small for a woman in her position; she always feels the pressure of the need of money, and the only reason for it is the penuriousness of her husband.

There is another story on similar lines, but a little lower in the circle of wealth. The husband is a wealthy Wall Street man, who spends money freely, but sees to it that his wife is not extravagant. She has an allowance of $10 a week for pocket money and general expenses, and she is allowed no extras aside from it. She cannot order anything at the hotel, aside from the things which go into the regular bill, or if she does she must pay for it from her weekly allowance. She cannot be generous even with things of her husband's ordering, for the husband looks well to the details of their daily life. The wife, sending as a little gift an apple to one friend by another, one day said:

"I should like to send an orange, but my husband counts the oranges."

There is a note of absurdity in recounting the woes of the woman with $10 a week for pocket money, and of another who may not have more than three or four imported gowns in a season. It sounds like a tale of "How to be unhappy on $1,000,000, or $50,000 a year." Why should a woman be unhappy with pin money which would support a working family or mourn for a lack of gowns when she spends for her wardrobe enough annually to support a small orphan asylum? But joys and sorrows are relative, and there is not a doubt that these women are more unhappy than others whose actual needs are urgent.

There are other things which might be considered in the circumstances—where some of the money goes which does not come to the wives, and who is to blame for the conditions—but that is aside from the point. There are marked cases where the woman does not receive from her husband the money to which from his circumstances and manner of life she is entitled.

A little dressmaker, who having once had I never stayed at a place more than a day and a half, and then I nearly died of it. I was laid up for a week. As a general thing a day furnishes me all the atmosphere I need. Then I take French leave.

"But at this place I worked a day and a half. Let me tell you about it. It was up in Harlem at a flat. I answered a smooth advertisement to the effect that a maid of all work was wanted. I was not so inclined to take this literally until afterward. Then I took pains to look up places where certain work was designated in the advertisement, anyway before I applied. You can't die but once, I mean, you don't want to.

"I called at this flat and an old lady opened the door. She couldn't see very well; with her eyes, that is. She was far-sighted enough in other respects. She invited me in very politely and asked me to be seated. She then informed me that she would give me $10 a month and my board to do her work. I accepted. The wage didn't scare me. I knew I would leave long before it came due.

"She took me into the girl's room, a cubbyhole where everything left over was piled to the ceiling, and in the corner stood a dustbroom with such a long handle that it made me homesick. There I took off my hat and jacket and followed her into the kitchen.

"Do you know what she made me do all that afternoon—a hot afternoon in August, with the thermometer boiling up and running over?

"Clean cockroaches out of a thousand presses reaching to the ceiling. All the other flat dwellers had gone away, she said, and left her their cockroaches; so she made me put a wiggly box on a wiggly chair and reach up till my arms nearly left their sockets, cleaning shelf after shelf, shelf after shelf, till I almost dropped from the wiggly box to the floor. She stood back of me, watching me. Her ancestors had been slave drivers in the South.

"'It's a pity I just gave my daughters' shirtwaists to the ragman,' she said, 'or I could have given them to you.'

"Her daughters! I looked around at her from my perch in amazement. She had informed me that there were only two in family—her husband, who was an invalid and didn't count, and herself.

"'How many daughters have you?' I faltered.

"'Two,' she replied; 'and have you never seen the picture of my son?'

"'No,' said I, 'I haven't.'

"'Get down a minute,' she smiled, 'and I will show it to you.'

"I got down willingly. It was time, or I might have dropped down from sheer fatigue. She preceded me into the parlor and showed me the pictures of her son and two daughters done up in mosquito netting to keep away the flies.

"'Where are they?' I asked. 'At work downtown,' she answered, 'but they will be home to dinner.'

"I began to understand how that was. They didn't count because they only slept there and took their breakfasts and dinners. They lunched downtown.

"I was not permitted to stand looking at pictures long. She hurried me back to the kitchen. She opened all the presses next to the floor.

"'Clean out those,' she said. Then, looking about smilingly, 'the kitchen is yours,' she added. 'Now clean it nice while I go and take a nap.'

"Funny, but I found if I worked out a day I got such a servant feeling I lost all my own identity. So I didn't object next morning when she said:

"'Now, Jane, when you are through with your dishes, I want you to go upstairs to my daughter's flat and see if she hasn't got some little thing for you to do.' I went up to the flat, and when I had washed a pile of dishes three days old for the daughter and made up three beds and swept five floors and cleaned out half a dozen closets and rocked the baby to sleep, she said in a kindly way:

"'You can go on down to mother now, Jane, if you like.'

"Mother was laying for me.

"'Do you know how to sew, Jane?' she asked as I entered the room.

"'Yes,' I admitted. I never made that admission at another place, however, I can tell you that.

"She ransacked the flat for clothing for me to darn. It wasn't long before I set up to my chin in work that if I had sewed steadily day in and day out for a solid month I couldn't have finished. I tiptoed into my little old room with the tall duster. I got my hat, and the way I shook the dust of that flat off my feet was a caution. In the street I ran as if mobs were after me. And, in spite of the two years' experience that counted for me [illegible]

But the rich sister would give anything for half her independence. If they are with friends it is the poorer sister who invites them to a cozy little luncheon or a cup of tea at no great expense but much pleasure at some handsome restaurant, and it is the poorer sister who gives now and then a quiet little theatre party. The richer sister cannot do this, because she has no money, and she can only entertain in the most conventional manner in her own home.

There is one case more, and this is the history undoubtedly of a husband badly educated by an overloving wife. He is a "good fellow," every one says, with no bad qualities except the small allowance he makes his wife. They live in a small town where his income is a good one. His wife has a certain allowance upon which she must dress herself, her children, and keep her house. She does it, but she works hard and dresses shabbily. The husband is such a "good fellow" that it is a delight to visit the family. He will spare no expense in taking his visitors around, and he always pays the bills. He dresses well himself and has the best of everything. If it ever occurred to him—and no one has spoken to him about it because he is such a "good fellow"—he might say that he could not increase his wife's allowance because he can spare no money. He never has money and does not know what becomes of that he has had. He does not even know what became of a little inheritance that came to his wife. It was some $3,000 from her own family which she, loving little woman, handed over to her husband as soon as she received it. There is none of it left now, for it gradually melted and no one knew quite how.

The little wife loves her husband devotedly because he is such a good fellow, and she can't help it. She never has complained and she never will, but the women, talking the matter over, asked themselves if he was not the most reprehensible husband in the lot.

They also asked each other why all these women endured the bitter humiliation to which the penuriousness of the husbands subjected them. They answered the question by saying that with the general pessimistic belief in the degeneration of the world, the rank and file of the women of the country have sterling characteristics and do not once think of the divorce court.

THE WAYS OF A MISTRESS.

SPEAKING of the scarcity of servants and the way they get up and leave," said the woman who writes, "I know something of their side. Now and then I work but a little while to get the atmosphere for a story. It's a

MODES OF THE MOMENT

MAY 1905

WEDDING gowns are still of interest, now that the old-time prejudice against weddings in May has so largely disappeared and this month brings quite a number of nuptials of more or less importance socially, while June, with many more marriages of interest, comes next.

The wedding gown worn by Miss Marian Arnot Haven, now Mrs. Forsythe Wickes, was made of heavy white satin, trimmed with precious old point lace and exquisitely embroidered in crystals and pearls. Miss Haven was the richest bride of many years, her fortune already amounting to millions, with more to come. The gown, however, while very handsome, was no richer than that of a number of other brides, nor were the few beautiful jewels she wore of greater value, and nowhere was there any ostentation or vulgar show of wealth.

The bridal gown was a princess robe of heavy white satin, and was made in New York. It had a long, square train, laid at the bottom in a box plait that tapered out toward the top; the plaits were not caught, but were formed by the draping of heavy white satin. There was an unlined stock and yoke of rare old point lace, and a bertha effect at the bust line. Down the centre front of the gown from yoke to hem seed pearls and crystal embroidery formed a panel. This panel was widest at the top, narrowed at the waist line, and then widened out again toward the hem, its greatest width being perhaps nine inches. The sleeves, formed of rather small but full puffs of satin, showed the embroidery down the centre of the outside, and just above the elbows, where the puffs ended, were frills of point lace. Some eleven inches from the lower edge of the skirt, at each side of the skirt, was a large cluster of orange blossoms; these partially concealed the beginning of a flat flounce, some ten inches wide, of old point lace that extended around to the train, but not across the latter. The train itself was bordered to a depth of ten inches with shirred or flat puffs of tulle, and the lace flounces at the sides disappeared at each side of the train under the tulle. The bridal veil, an heirloom, was a long scarf of point lace, slightly yellowed by age, that went half the length of the train; it was frilled slightly over the low, dark pompadour of her coiffure, and caught there with orange blossoms. She wore a rivière, some twenty inches long, of large diamonds, to which was attached a large diamond pendant, the gift of her mother, and a corsage ornament of diamonds, having in its centre an enormous square-cut emerald at least an inch across; this was the gift of her uncle, Matthew Arnot of Elmira. Her bouquet was a large affair, and chiefly lilies of the valley.

The two little flower girls, who immediately preceded the bride, were little Miss Katherine Mackay, eldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Mackay, and Miss Katharine Haven, daughter of the bride's brother, J. Woodward Haven. They wore no hats. Their little frocks were low-necked and short-sleeved garments of finest white mull. The baby waists were tucked in eighth-inch tucks down the centre front and back, and the little skirts were gathered in to the belt bands, and had two clusters of fine tucks running around the bottom; attached to the hems were two-inch edgings of Duchess lace. The little puffed sleeves were frilled with the same lace, and loose squares of rose point and Duchess lace extended from the necks of the gowns down over the sleeves to the sleeve ruffles. They wore white stockings and slippers, and each carried a basket of pink sweet peas in her right hand. Their left hands were clasped as they walked before the bride.

The bridesmaids were in heavy white silk crêpe, embroidered in bands with white silk, and also in sweet peas in natural colors, and trimmed with lace. Their hats were pale blue Neapolitan straw, not large, but with much-lifted and knocked-in brims, close at the back, curved at the sides and flaring in the front. They were trimmed with pale blue ribbon velvet in flat, stiff loops, with a fold of pale pink projecting from the outer edge of each loop. These velvet loops appeared in the back, also under the brim at the right as well, and plain bands went around the crown. Where the hats curved up at the left masses of pink sweet peas were fastened, and in the front pale blue ostrich tips nodded.

The gowns had skirts shirred tightly below the waistline to a depth of about three inches, and at the bottom of each skirt were two lace ruffles. The bodices had stocks and guimpes of lace, and were gathered to fit. Across the top of each bodice, some three inches below the stock in the back, was heavy embroidery in white. The girdles were of ciel blue and some six or seven inches broad, an inch of the girdle extending below the waistline, and the rest covering the lower third of the bodice. These girdles were laid in scant plaits around the waist and their long straight ends hung almost to the hem of the skirts. At the ends they were embroidered in pink and white sweet peas, the flowers being formed of bits of chiffon worked on to the silk. Similar sweet peas were embroidered across the bodice a short distance below the white silk embroidery, and the puffed sleeves of the silk crepe—which were puffed twice, but were scanty and small—showed narrow bands of white satin also embroidered with the sweet peas; these bands came just above the elbow, and from them drooped narrow lace ruffles. Between the shirrings below the waistline and the lace ruffles at the bottom of the skirts were two sets of shirrings with headings an inch deep, the skirts being in reality formed of three graduated Spanish flounces, each being set on the one above, to form the skirt. Each bridesmaid carried a large bouquet of pink sweet peas.

Some of the gowns seen at the Williams-Edgar wedding and at the Wickes-Haven wedding were among the handsomest in evidence this Spring. At the former Mrs. C. B. Alexander wore a rich golden brown silk crêpe, with shirred skirt, and an Eton coat trimmed with narrow, flat puffs of the same material, and her hat, which matched the gown exactly, had bird of paradise plumes of the same shade at the side. As Mrs. Alexander has wonderful reddish gold hair, the color of her costume was a perfect setting, and far and away more her style than the black [illegible] with its wonderful em-the reverse of effective. The gown was composed of golden tan silk and deep cream colored chiffon cloth, embroidered in bands in silver and guipure lace of the same color as the cloth. The whole gown had long lines, and was distinctly mediaeval in the cut of its wide sleeves and the overhanging tablier effect of the bodice. The sleeves, close at the top, widened at the bottom, and were formed of several overlapping sections, edged with the chiffon cloth, slightly stiffened. The guipure lace formed panels on the skirt over the golden tan silk, with the cloth showing between the panels, and the girdle was of the golden tan silk, which also showed in one set of the sleeves and around the yoke. Below the skirt panels, which extended some distance below the knees, was a circular section of the crêpe, the same color as the silk, exquisitely embroidered in silver thread. It was a gown impossible to describe in detail from a few fleeting glimpses, but with Mrs. Mackay's tall, slight figure and rich coloring it was wonderfully effective. Her hat was one of the new French creations in ecru or yellowish tan crinoline, tilting up at the back and left and down at the front and right, with shaded brown and tan tulle in masses at the back and wound around the crown, while at the left side was a bird of paradise in browns, and full plumes in golden tan floated out at the back and down at the left.

Another handsome gown was worn by Mrs. James Speyer, who has just returned from abroad, and who has been wearing some of the latest and most effective Parisian creations. This was a rich heliotrope silk, with wonderful shirrings and puffings, and a stock and deep overlying guimpe of rare old yellow lace; it was topped by a rather large hat to match, trimmed with lace and flowers. The church was too dark to give one a chance to see details. At Delmonico's the other day Mrs. Speyer wore one of the new rich blues in chiffon cloth, with one of the new Eton coats, having wide, short sleeves, with touches of black in the edgings of the various parts, and a pale blue chiffon bodice all in scant, flat puffs, topped by one of the tilted-forward French chapeaus, rolled up at the back and pointed at the front. A fold of lighter blue satin ribbon was wound around the crown and outlined the point, and at the back a cluster of fat, purplish blue ostrich tips rolled up over the turned-up portion and down toward the crown.

The bridal attendants at the wedding of Miss Hattie Louise Barnes to Alfred Severin Bourne, son of Commodore Bourne of the New York Yacht Club, were, with one exception, in lavender chiffon. The exception was the maid of honor, Miss Helen Ballard, who wore pale blue chiffon, topped by a blue hat. The matron of honor, Mrs. Avent Childress, was in very pale lavender, trimmed with white lace, and wore a white hat with lavender plumes. The eight bridesmaids were most of them school chums of the bride at the Farmington School, and the greater number were from other cities. The bridesmaids were Miss May Bourne, the bridegroom's sister; Miss Suzette Hall of New York, Miss Eloise Williams of Detroit, Miss Mary Tucker of Albany, Miss Helen H. Day of Indianapolis, Miss Marie Louise Hoopes of Elkins Park, Penn.; Miss Rachel Tatnall of Bryn Mawr, and Miss Harriet Burr Barbour of Hartford. Their lavender chiffon gowns were all of different shades, and their hats matched. Their flowers were sweet peas and violet orchids.

The white satin gown of the bride had a bodice entirely of point lace, and panel effects in point lace appeared on the front of the gown.

The wedding of Isabelle Byrnes, a daughter of former Superintendent of Police Byrnes, now Mrs. George MacDonald, interested a large number of people. The bridal gown was of valenciennes lace over white satin, and the bride's only attendant, her sister, Miss Amy Byrnes, was in lavender crêpe de chine, with insertions of lace the color of the gown. Her lilac-colored hat was trimmed with sprays of lilacs, and her bouquet was made up of lilacs.

Miss Fannie H. Ellis, who married Richard Duane Humphreys, was in white satin, with a plain skirt and long train, the bodice being draped with point d'Alençon. The attendants, the Misses Katharine Barney, Cornelia Harriman, and Susan and Edith Ellis—the last two sisters of the bride—were in blue mull trimmed with Valenciennes lace; they wore large white straw hats trimmed with pink back was finished without a girdle. A deep guimpe of point lace was worn and her full tulle veil was arranged in a knot effect above her dark pompadour, with no frills or ruchings to conceal the coiffure. The bride's only attendant, Miss Elisabeth Auchincloss, wore a white satin crêpe de chine, the bodice a modified surplice with guimpe and bertha of beautiful white lace on the Cluny order; the skirt, falling in full folds, was gathered at the top and was finished at the bottom with two narrow overlapping ruffles, nearly three-fourths of their width being of white lace. The elbow sleeves were frilled with lace. Her white hat showed white lace and ostrich plumes, and she carried lilies of the valley and sweet peas, her costume and flowers being entirely white.

An exquisite robe suggestive of old-time modes has been imported, merely to go back to Europe again, to be worn there by the wealthy American girl who added it to her trousseau and who will spend the Summer abroad. The skirt is a trailing robe of sunray plaited, pale-green chiffon cloth—that sort of green that shows when apple trees first begin to bud. Over this is worn a low-necked, sleeveless coat of white lace lined with pale-pink chiffon. The coat part is tight-fitting, an easy fit, of course, in order not to strain the materials, but fit it does from the bust to far below the hips like a glove. At the top the coat ends just across the top of the bust, and it closes down the front to the waist line, where it begins to separate and the skirts are rounded away to the bottom, giving a

Bands of the embroidery cross over the shoulders, as there are no sleeves to the coat. Attached to the top of the coat, tacked under the upper edge, is a single fold of white chiffon, and fastened to this as a foundation is a very wide scarf of white tulle, which is plaited and invisibly tacked, to cover the shoulders and upper part of the bust with billowy folds, the ends being carelessly knotted together in the front in a loose, twisted bow with one group of short, doubled ends. Of course this bow once tacked remains untouched till the tulle loses its freshness, when it may be renewed. The tulle does not conceal the border of blossoms, as only the lower folds of the tulle touch its top. Below the floral shoulder bands and attached to each one is a sleeve cap of white chiffon, and over this folds of tulle are draped, like the fichu about the neck, to form sleeves six inches long, and below these folds, attached to the chiffon cap, is a very full double ruffle of tulle six inches long at the inside of the arm and twelve inches long at the outside, the ruffle being graduated.

A simple dinner gown for a widow, ordered by an American woman in Paris, is described in a private letter from abroad as follows: The frock is a black chiffon over a supple and thin white silk lining. The skirt of round length is shirred around the waist line, and the bodice is also shirred in at that point; a six-inch girdle—an inch or so of which extends over the top of the skirt, the other five lapping over the bodice—is of black taffeta chiffon, fastened a bit to the left of the front with a straight jet buckle an inch wide. The sleeves are each formed of a single full puff that droops from the shoulders; each is shirred on cords four times just above the elbows, and is finished by a short, double ruffle of the chiffon, from under which droops a single ruffle of white lace two inches longer than the chiffon over the ruffle. The bodice is cut at the top and in both the back and in front in V's, the depth of which in the centre is exactly eight inches from the base of the neck. These are sharp V's, and at the sides the distance from the base of the neck to the bodice top is but two inches. A shaped bertha of white lace and plaited chiffon forms the finish. The tucked chiffon section is three inches deep and the tucks flare sufficiently to have the section fit smoothly to the bodice; this tucked piece is inserted at the top and back of the lace bertha or deep overhanging collar, the tucked portion ending in the front perhaps two inches from the shoulder seams. The lace collar forms a deep point in the back, and extends out over the shoulders at the sides; the tops of the centre fronts meet at the base of the V and then fall apart, each forming a deep V, and attached to the point of each of these V's is a white silk tassel heavily jetted in fine black crystals. Folds of white tulle are laid under the top edges of the bodice. The skirt is decorated with six-inch insertions of white lace matching that on the bodice. The upper one forms a V in the front and the back, and is on a line above the knees, rising much higher at the sides and descending to form the V's. The lower insertion rises in the centre front to form an upward turning V, the top of which just meets the downward turning black suède gloves, and black hose and black suède slippers complete the toilet.

From all indications silks in various weaves will be the most worn of any material, not excepting linens and voiles, for dressy wear. For traveling or knocking about wear nothing can excel the various mohairs and voiles, but for dress occasions the silk materials will lead.

In taffeta weaves silk now comes so light and flexible that it may be drawn through a small finger ring, and it has developed good wearing qualities with its loss of stiffness and "dressing."

The pongees are of course among the fashionable gown materials, while for the purse of moderate size India silks in black or white, lace trimmed, or made up into the simplest of shirtwaist costumes, make the coolest sort of hot weather gown for general utility purposes.

Foulards are always worn, but their tendency to spot and also to run badly when wet are their great faults, and most serious ones, but their high lustre and their diversity of pattern and coloring render them attractive to the great majority of women.

Surah weaves in glacé or changeable effects and in coarse wales are also in the market, and checked silks seen are smart.

In wash materials linen leads. Many of the severe white linen costumes have revers, cuffs, &c., of a contrasting color, such as rose, pale blue, or a delicate green or mauve and coats of the colored linen in some instances are being made to accompany the frocks, white shoes to be worn with these gowns.

Among the novelties are sleeves that match the skirt rather than the waist or coat material. For example, a costume with a lace skirt and having a silk coat has sleeves of lace instead of the silk. When the skirt is of chiffon and the bodice of lace, the chiffon will appear again in the sleeves.

Velvet ribbon in black as well as colors will be much used; indeed, it is being used in quantities on gowns now in process of construction. The ribbon is used to border ruffles and panels and in loops and fringe effects.

Rosettes in ribbon, velvet, and lace are taking the place of the little stiff Louis or French bows that have for some time been in vogue. Many of these rosettes are also in chiffon. They match the color of the gown, and often show velvet centres of darker shades.

Some of the new gowns are trimmed in darker shades of the same color, and this mode is effective in the lightweight cloths of smooth finish.

MARIE WELDON.

NEW USE FOR MOTION PICTURES.

JUST as the phonograph, beginning as an entertaining toy, has become an important factor in business, the moving picture is now being adapted to commercial uses. When you think of it, there are lots of situations in which moving pictures can help the business man. If a photograph is convincing, a motion photograph should be doubly so.

A mining expert who went to Europe from North Dakota a week or so ago to interest British capitalists in new properties in the Black Hills country, carried with him a moving picture outfit of some 600 pictures, showing every stage of work on the properties in which he is interested. He intends to show prospective investors not only that there really is a mine—there have been cases in which there was not, but only stock—but the stage reached in developing it, how many men are at work and how much machinery is employed. With the pictures he had a guarantee from the moving picture company that they were genuine and were made on the men who see the pictures. These are so arranged that they can be thrown on a three-foot screen and exhibited in a private office or displayed in an enlarged size in a public hall. A larger screen and a bigger lens are the only changes required.

"My business," said the man with the pictures to a TIMES reporter, "is to interest moneyed men in mining properties. I have been doing that for more years than I like to reckon, and up in the Black Hills they all know me. Ask 'em about 'Bedrock Bob.'

"Now, there's only one sure way of selling anything to an up-to-date business man. Show him the article you wish to sell him and make him see that your own money is in it, too. Let him look it over for himself, investigate it, and find out if it's worth his while to go in. I've been taking parties of Easterners through the Black Hills and letting 'em see before they buy. That's my way. But now I'm going after the Britishers, and that is a different proposition.

"It would be petty hard to get a prosperous English business man—and they are the men I'm after—to leave his home and travel 5,000 miles to look into a business proposition because a stranger with figures and papers and a good game of talk told him it would be a good thing for him to do. I've got to have something more to show than that. Well, I devised this plan of getting moving pictures of the mines I'm interested in. Not being able to get my investors to the mines, I'm going to bring the mines to the investors.

"Anyway, these will convince the Britishers that mine are real mines, and there is something doing on 'em. When they see that there's more than talk behind my projects, maybe they'll be interested enough to investigate for themselves—which is all I want. What do you think?"

The reporter thought that the British ought to be impressed by this new instance of American ingenuity and enterprise.

HOW MUCH WORSE IT MIGHT HAVE BEEN.

NOTWITHSTANDING her tender years, Catharine's characteristics are in evidence; and the most pronounced of them all is the unfailing tendency, in the most harrowing situations, to look on the bright side.

On one occasion, having got hold of a hammer, she ambitiously endeavored to drive a tack into the wall, on which to hang her doll's hat. After repeated failures to hit the troublesome tack by clutching the hammer in both fat hands and thus delivering a terrific blow, she next tried holding the tack in one hand and dealing a less powerful stroke with the hammer in the other hand. The result of this experiment brought the whole family running to the nursery.

After the damaged finger had been bathed and kissed and bandaged, in the midst of various consolations and commiserations, Catherine's tears began to stop and her philosophy to rise.

"It don't hurt so awful bad now, mamma. 'Sides, when my finger got hit, I was jus' holdin' the hammer in only one han'—an' jus' s'pose I'd been strikin' with both hands!"

FURNITURE THAT TELLS NO TALES.

THE WOMAN in a fashionable furniture store looked the new sideboard all over, but seemed so indifferent that the salesman despaired of a sale. He was preparing to accept the usual "will call again" when an idea occurred to him. Opening a cabinet on the side intended for cruet bottles, he touched a spring. To the astonished customer was revealed a secret drawer, large enough to hold a dozen letters or so, a bank book, and a few jewels. The salesman closed the drawer.

"Now you open it," he said to the customer.

She tried in vain. She asked the salesman to show her how. He said he would with pleasure if she bought the sideboard.

THE FOUR MADCAPS AT HAMMERSTEIN'S

This Week's New Offerings.

WILTON LACKAYE AND VIRGINIA HARNED IN "TRILBY," a drama, by Paul Potter, founded on Du Maurier's, to-morrow evening, at the New Amsterdam Theatre.

THE ORLENEFF-NASIMOFF COMPANY IN "TZAR FEODOR IVANOVITCH," to-morrow evening, at the Murray Hill Theatre.

THE GEORGE FAWCETT COMPANY IN "THE LIARS," a comedy, by Henry Arthur Jones, to-morrow evening, at the American Theatre.

THE revival of "Trilby," which takes place to-morrow evening at the New Amsterdam Theatre, will without doubt be an occasion of more than ordinary interest in the present waning season. Theatregoers will remember the brilliant success achieved by the play over ten years ago at the Garden Theatre, and the long run following the presentation. A revival of the drama itself would be worthy of much attention, but when the announcement comes that the original cast will again play the familiar rôles it becomes a dramatic event of real importance.

With but one or two exceptions when the curtain rises to-morrow night the same faces will be seen that were associated with the production of a decade ago. Wilton Lackaye, it will be remembered, created a sensation by his performance of Svengali, the hypnotist. Mr. Lackaye played the part with truly wonderful realism, and made a remarkable impression. He again is cast for the part. The Trilby of that day was Virginia Harned, who also will appear to-morrow night. Other players who were then seen in the important rôles were Burr McIntosh as Taffy, John Glendenning as The Laird, Edward W. Morrison as Gecke, Leo Dietrichstein as Zou Zou, Herbert Ayling as Dodor, Rosa Rand as Mrs. Bagot, and Mme. Cortelly as Mme. Vignard, all of whom made personal successes in their parts. These players will again portray the respective characters to-morrow evening at the New Amsterdam.

There will be but one new leading principal in that William Courtenay will play Little Billee, formerly played by Alfred Hickman.

The Orleneff-Nasimoff Company of Russian players has engaged the Murray Hill Theatre for a limited engagement, beginning to-morrow night. The initial production will be "Tsar Feodor Ivanovitch," ("The Son of Ivan the Terrible,") which has never before been produced in America. Mr. Orleneff will play the part of the weak-minded Tsar, a part that he has played over 600 times. It is said among his confrères that many of the mannerisms that he has made characteristic of the part were suggested by a study of the present Tsar.

Some time ago this same company gave a matinée performance at the Herald Square Theatre, producing "The Chosen People." At that time a distinct impression was made, and with this recommendation the public should give this more ambitious engagement its hearty support.

The brilliant comedy, "The Liars," by Henry Arthur Jones, has been selected for the second week's bill at the American Theatre. Percy Haswell, who played Juliet during the past week, will again appear at the head of the company in the rôle of Lady Jessica Nepean. While this was not the star part in the original production on Broadway, it affords much dramatic possibility, and will give Miss Haswell opportunity to show her gifts as a comedienne.

Frank Gillmore will play the principal male rôle, that of Sir Christopher Deering. Of almost equal importance is the rôle of Edward Falkner, which will introduces a new member of the company, Edwin Arden. Laura McGilvary, who played the second rôles with Mrs. Fiske in "Becky Sharp" and "Hedda Gabler," will also make her first appearance with the company as Lady Rosamund Patton, while Bijou Fernandez, who during the past season has been a member of the star cast of "The Two Orphans," will appear as Beatrice Ebsrnoe.

The week of May 15 will be devoted to the engagement of Jacob P. Adler in "The Merchant of Venice," with Miss Haswell as Portia.

Thatcher as Quincy. The company has had a most successful road tour and comes to New York for a run before closing its season. The press of the country has been very generous in its praise of "Quincy Adams Sawyer," as have the pulpit and the public.

PLAYS THAT HOLD.

Ethel Barrymore, whose engagement at the Lyceum was limited to a fortnight, will begin the last week of her engagement in "A Doll's House" to-morrow evening. In the drama she has achieved a distinct success and has attracted much attention by her work. Next week Miss Barrymore sails for Europe.

"The Firm of Cunningham" begins the fourth week of its run at the Madison Square. Hilda Spong seems to have found a part that fits her personality in the rôle of Dora Calvert.

"The College Widow" continues on her merry way at the Garden, entering on her thirty-fourth week to-morrow night. The season will close on Saturday night, at which time the comedy will have been played 274 times in this city.

This is the last week of Alice Fischer and her clever comedy of manners "The School for Husbands," at Wallack's. Both play and player have met with much popularity.

Marie Tempest is playing to the capacity of the Empire in her comedy, "The Freedom of Suzanne." The third week of her limited engagement begins to-morrow.

The popularity of Paul Armstrong's comedy, "The Heir to the Hoorah," is demonstrated by the fact that the last week was the biggest one of the engagement at the Hudson.

On Saturday evening, June 2, David Warfield will close his remarkable run of almost 300 consecutive performances in "The Music Master" in this city. Tickets for all of the remaining performances may now be had at the box office. There will be an extra matinée given on Decoration Day.

MUSICAL ATTRACTIONS.

Charles B. Dillingham announces that Frank Daniels in "Sergeant Brue" is a positive all-Summer attraction at the Knickerbocker. The star and his merry company have made a most favorable impression.

Sam Bernard and "The Rollicking Girl" are making gay and rollicking success at the Herald Square Theatre. Without a doubt the production will keep New York in the best of humor all Summer.

"Fantana" still forges ahead at the Lyric, where Jefferson De Angelis, Katie Barry, and others of the company seem to have become an institution. The one hundred and fiftieth performance will occur on Wednesday evening, May 24.

COMBINATION HOUSES.

George M. Cohan, in his own musical play, "Little Johnny Jones," returns to the New York to-morrow evening for a stay of three weeks. This will be Mr. Cohan's fifth engagement in this play in the city this season, which speaks well for both play and player. He will be supported by the same cast seen with him this season.

To-morrow night at the Harlem Opera House Henry B. Harris will present Mrs. Sarah Cowell Le Moyne in "A Blot in the 'Scutcheon" for a week's engagement. The revival of this drama has proved an artistic success, its reception at the Hudson Theatre being most cordial. The cast supporting Mrs. Le Moyne includes William Beach, Grace Elliston, John Albaugh, Jr., Theodore Hamilton, and Clarence Heritage.

play which a short time ago was presented with much success at the Majestic Theatre, comes to the Fourteenth Street Theatre to-morrow night. Master Gabriel still plays the title rôle and is assisted in the merrymaking by George Ali as Tige.

"Faust" has been selected by the management of the Yorkville Theatre for the week's vehicle of the stock company. Anne Sutherland will be Marguerite. It is announced that the scenic effects will be most adequate, while for the Brocken scene great preparations have been made.

+ + +

Kellar, the magician, comes to the Metropolis this week after his popular engagement at the Majestic Theatre. All the mysterious tricks that typified his recent run will be given at this engagement.

Eugenie Blair and a specially selected company will begin a four weeks' stock engagement at the West End Theatre, beginning to-morrow evening. For the first week Miss Blair will revive "Sapho." A special and only performance of "East Lynne" will be given at the Saturday matinée. The prices will be twenty-five, fifty, and seventy-five cents. At the Wednesday and Saturday matinées twenty-five cents will be charged.

"The Confessions of a Wife" is the offering at the New Star for the week. The production is the same as seen in the city some time ago.

Joseph Stantley, a youthful exponent of dramatic art, will be the attraction at the Windsor, appearing in the melodrama "From Rags to Riches."

VAUDEVILLE.

Peter F. Dailey, supported by his Lulu Girls, is the particular star this week at Hurtig & Seamon's Music Hall. Toby Claude, a comedienne of much talent as an entertainer, occupies the second place on the bill. Other performers are Dean Edsall and company in a one-act comedy entitled "The Two Rubies," Howard brothers, banjoists; Elmer Tenley, Mazus and Mazette, acrobats; Bennett and Rich in "The German Recruit," and the Gregsons.

"Dorothy Vernon of Haddon Hall," Bertha Galland's successful play, will be the attraction at Proctor's One Hundred and Twenty-fifth Street Theatre for the week. Beatrice Morgan will appear in the title rôle, while William Kelley will appear as Sir John Manners. The drama will be staged with the original settings.

Chassino, the hand and foot shadowgraphist, who scored such a hit at Keith's in March, returns to that theatre this week. Dida also is on the bill and continues to mystify as much as when first produced. James Morton, the monologist, is another feature. The musical novelties will be furnished by the Maghani Family and "A Night in Venice." Others are Cliff Gordon, Mr. and Mrs. Mark Murphy in "The Coal Strike," George Austin, Leonard and Drake, Gillett's Dogs, Davis and Walker, and Grace Leonard.

At Hammerstein's Victoria this week McIntyre and Heath will be seen for the last time in vaudeville prior to their starring tour. The remainder of the bill will be furnished by Spessardy's Bears and Ponies, Trovolo, ventriloquist; Four Madcaps, Clarice Vance, Frank and Jennie Latona, M. Probst, the Great Buckner, Smiri and Kessner, and the vitagraph.

This week at Proctor's Fifty-eighth Street Theatre the spectacular melodrama, "Mr. Barnes of New York," will be presented. Robert Drouet will be seen in the title rôle, supported by Grace Reals and the stock company.

Abbott Parker, the man with the mark of a crucifix on his back said to be the result of lightning, will be the main feature at Huber's Fourteenth Street Museum this week. Carl's wrestling bear is also on the bill.

The figures of Nan Patterson, Mrs. Chadwick, and Field Marshal Oyama are gramme includes the Grand Opera Trio, Ryan and Richfield, the Golden Gate Quintet, George H. Woods, Edna Luby and company, Parker's Dogs, Kate Leipsig, and the moving pictures.

There are five star attractions at the Colonial Music Hall this week. Irene Bentley heads the list with her songs, and the musical comedy favorite will no doubt be well received. Will Cressy and Blanche Dayne follow with "The Town Hall To-night," their latest vehicle. Charles T. Aldrich, the comedy juggler, will do his skit; Burt Leslie, Robert Dailey and company will be seen in their comedy sketch, and Edna Aug will sing in her own funny way. Others on the bill are the four Lukens, Bellman and Moore, Charles Kenna, the Young Brothers, and the vitagraph.

"The Three Guardsmen," founded on Alexandre Dumas's stirring romantic novel, will be produced this week by the stock company at the Fifth Avenue Theatre. Henry Woodruff is to be D'Artagnan and Olive Oliver, Miladi. Charles Abbe, Wallace Erskine, Dudley Hawley, Gerald Griffin, and Scott Cooper will be cast in the other principal rôles.

THE HIPPODROME.

Two hundred and thirty thousand persons have seen the Hippodrome show since the big playhouse opened, on April 12. There is no parallel in amusement annals. At none of the twenty-three night performances has one of the 5,200 chairs been vacant. The matinées have drawn crowds almost as large. Society has made it a nightly rendezvous, and the wealth and power of the country converge upon it.

"A Yankee Circus on Mars" and "The Raiders" will continue to display their charms of beauty, costume, song, dance, march, and grim excitement. New circus and specialty acts are programmed for this week. Col. Bordeverry will demonstrate his skill with rifle and pistol in an even more thrilling performance. Albert Carre, Germany's famous horse trainer, has prepared a demonstration of the wonder products of skill and patience, which he promises will be a revelation and sensation. Acrobats, gymnasts, clowns, and others of the arenic department will be new in face and act. Marceline, the English clown, has already established his popularity here, and Thompson & Dundy have engaged him for a long season.

SUNDAY CONCERTS.

AMERICAN.—At this theatre to-night Ben Harris will give the first of a series of four concerts. The bill is a strong one, and includes Peter F. Dailey and his eight Lulu Girls, Three La Mar Brothers, Fred Bowers, Eddie Girard and Jessie Gardner, and a dozen other entertainers.

COLONIAL.—Concert to-night, with full programme of the week's bill.

Elsie Janis, Callahan and Mack, Willy Zimmerman, Roberts, Hayes and Roberts, Foy and Clark, Patty Brothers, Lillian Bender, and Harry Parker's dogs.

METROPOLIS.—Moore and Littlefield, Campbell and Caulfield, Tascott, Lillian and Shorty De Witt, and a number of others.

VICTORIA.—Cecelia Loftus, Dolan and Lenharr, Fred Niblo, Yorke and Adams, Hill and Sylvainy, Ernest Hogan, Piccolo's Midgets, Ford Sisters, and the Great La Page.

THEATRICAL NOTES.

At the anniversary meeting of the Actors' Fund at the Broadway Theatre on Tuesday, May 9, 1905, at 2:30 P. M., Marie Tempest is announced to sing in conjunction with other prominent soloists. The Right Rev. H. C. Potter, D. D., Bishop of New York, and Hon. D Cady Herrick will be the speakers. All members of the theatrical profession are invited. Tickets of admission may be procured at the principal theatres, theatrical exchanges, and the offices of the fund, Rooms 606 and 607, at 112 and 114 West Forty-second Street.

The first stock star season ever played in the Harlem Opera House will be inaugurated on Monday, May 22, when the Adelaide Keim stock company will begin a Spring and Summer season. The opening play will be "Camille." Miss Keim was leading woman at Proctor's up-town theatre for several seasons, and enjoys exceeding popularity with Harlem theatregoers. She will have a strong supporting company, including M. L. Alsop, at present leading man with Blanche Walsh, and Giles Shine, who recently played Polonius with Forbes Robertson in "Hamlet." The books for seat reservations for the entire season have been opened, and already insure the success of the opening weeks.

The greatest list of artists presented this season for a vaudeville performance is that announced for this Sunday evening at the Metropolitan Opera House, when the third annual benefit for the Actors' Home is to be given under the auspices of the vaudeville managers and agents of New York. Several hundred eminent artists have offered to appear, and a number of special features and original acts have been arranged in order to bring the entire number on the stage. The first part will include an old-time Christy minstrel show, with those well-known former partners, George Wilson, Hughey Dougherty, and George Thatcher, in the ends, and many well-known comedians, vocalists, and specialty artists in the circle, concluding with Tony Pastor in one of his old-time songs, assisted by the entire company, this being Mr. Pastor's only appearance and probably his farewell to the stage. Other sensations are promised during this act by Mr. Dresser, who will have it in charge.

The second part will be a grand all-star olio, including fifteen to twenty of esses and actors who play Ibsen cover up his simplest statements are utterly foolish; that when his dialogue is natural he means it to be just natural. In other words, it is a ridiculous twisting after the mystic and an unwarrantable liberty to speak the line 'Pass me the butter', as if one were covering up a threat to kill—just because it's Ibsen.

"'A Doll's House' is the very essence of simple naturalism, and I try to play Nora in a natural way, as I believe the author himself would like to see it played. The terribly tragic depths it holds in places are a legitimate part of the conception, but Nora, when she first appears, and until her eyes are opened later on, is nothing but a simple child.

"I am not superstitious as a rule, but I am cherishing a little superstition about my flight into the new field. After I determined to play the part of Nora I found that the book had been written and printed in the year I was born. That seems like a stupid superatition, doesn't it? But it is certainly a harmless one, and it is helping to make me determined to put my whole heart into this matinée performance next Thursday."

"A Doll's House" was printed in 1879. So persons who have been asking the age of this youngest Ibsen disciple can easily figure it out. Contrasted with Miss Barrymore's views of Nora are these opinions recorded by Mary Shaw:

"Is it not a little wonderful how Ibsen came to write four or five plays in which the heart of a woman is absolutely laid bare, absolutely probed to the depths—that old, lion-faced party sitting there in that hermit study of his? How did it happen? This way, surely. Ibsen was a great Socialist in his young days. The compromise, corruption, ineffectiveness of the Government disgusted him, and he went to the cause of it. He saw how men thinned, flattened out under temptation and failed at need. He saw in them the eternal soft spot, wondered where it came from. Then he said to himself, 'The woman!' He asked himself, 'How can the woman, cased round with all sorts of restrictions, largely a bundle of the negative virtues, give to her son the great soul?' Then he said—in his plays: 'Release the woman! Open her cage. If she loves it she'll walk back, but she'll be a free woman.' And she'll find you a thousand reasons for staying there when she can leave it that the jailer has never thought of! 'Let her even sin,' he says, 'But let her learn and be strong.' 'A Doll's House,' began the plays. 'Ghosts' is the sequel. 'Perfectly dreadful,' people say about Nora Helmer leaving her home and husband. But Nora, finding in herself the liar, the thief, exiled herself until such time as she could be worthy mother to the children she had, and worthily bear others. So I read it.

"And Mrs. Alving stayed, in 'Ghosts' chose to remain at home. Of course the man was different. But Mrs. Alving did the conventionally moral thing—Oswald was the result. There, where she grovels on the floor before her son, lapsing into idiocy, is the magnificence of 'Ghosts.' Every child's birthright is love—'what kind of a life did you give me, mother?' he asks."

FOR THE MRS. GILBERT FUND.

A matinée for the benefit of the Mrs. Gilbert Fund will be given at the Madison Square Theatre on Friday. The proceeds are to be given to the project for the bronze statue in one of the public parks.

The suggestion for this benefit came originally from a number of young actors. They selected Ibsen's play, "The Master Builder," as the choice of their artistic aspiration.

William Hazeltine (recently of Wilton Lackaye's company) will play the title rôle. Mrs. Ida Jeffreys Goodfriend, who was a member of Richard Mansfield's company when the first performance of "A Doll's House" was given in this country in Boston (1889) with Beatrice Cameron in the leading rôle, is also in the cast, as is Fred Thompson, who has had charge of the rehearsals and has directed the Ibsen productions of Blanche Bates during the past two seasons.

A matter of interest in the performance is the appearance of Amy Ricard, the athletic girl in "The College Widow," as the heroine, Hilda Wangel.

TWO VIEWS OF NORA.

"I have long looked forward to the day when I could take up the more enduring and impressive stage work," said Ethel Barrymore a few days ago. "It was not until a little while ago, however, that I thought of Ibsen, and it was my brother Lionel who first put the idea into my head. Last year we read several of Ibsen's works together, but I couldn't get interested at all; in fact, for some reason or other I found this reading an unpleasant and unprofitable task.

"I did not read 'A Doll's House' at that time. My brother went through this alone, and at once told me to get the book and be sure to figure very seriously on the possibility of being attracted by its dramatic power. I very soon followed his advice, and immediately afterward cabled Mr. Frohman asking him if I the play is being done in a neighborhood in which one would, most unlikely look for it—away down on the lower east side in the theatre of the Educational Alliance. But little of the work accomplished at this theatre is known to those living above Houston Street because no bid is made for uptown audiences, and the work has not been exploited in any way, the management saying simply to those who are interested, "Come and see what we are doing." Those who answered that invitation last evening saw a production of "As You Like It."

During this season the little theatre has provided an excellent production of Frances Hodgson Burnett's play, "The Little Princess," a charming production of William De Mille's play, "The Forest Ring," a beautifully staged and admirably well acted production of "Ingomar," and now the season ends with this excellent production of "As You Like It," which will run until May 8, inclusive.

LANDMARK TO BE SUBMERGED.

Northwood, N. Y., May 5.

TOURISTS who visit the westerly side of the Adirondacks sometimes stumble on to a spot of historic interest in the valley of the West Canada Creek here that will disappear from view within a few years. It was at a ford near the picnic grounds of this little hamlet that Major Walter Butler, the noted Tory of the War of the Revolution, was killed late in the afternoon of Oct. 29, 1781. This ford can be definitely located now, but the State is to build a dam 90 feet high at Hinckley, four miles below, for the benefit of the barge canal, and the lake so created will submerge the whole valley here.

As the reader will remember, Major Butler, with a band of Tories and Indians, had been on a raid in the Mohawk Valley. Col. Marinus Willett, with some 500 men, pursued and overtook him at a ford about two miles above the junction of Black Creek with the West Canada. According to Willett's account, Butler, with his command, made a stand on the north side of the creek, and in the firing that followed Butler was shot through the head and instantly killed.

One of the old inhabitants of the region (Mrs. Sarah Jones) says a wagon road was laid on the trail that Butler followed and this road was in common use

Some Memories of the Original "Trilby": By Herself and Her Associates

Revival of Potter's Dramatization of Du Maurier's Novel Recalls to Members of the Original Cast Some Interesting Incidents of the Presentation a Decade Past.

AFTER ten years "Trilby" is to come back to us to-morrow night—that same "Trilby" who for so long had New York literally and figuratively at her feet. And it seems hardly possible that the gentle heroine of Du Maurier's story will fail to find a sympathetic welcome.

Ten years is after all not such a very long period in the life of an actress, and though time has served to bring many changes to Virginia Harned, she still remains a popular favorite in our theatres. In the Trilby that we knew ten years ago there was an insistent charm, a vague gentle spirit of romance, and a whole colorful history of such moving power that her return would seem to be the occasion for felicitous comment. There can be no doubt that since that time Virginia Harned's art has broadened and enlarged. Her grasp on life is surer, her hold on the emotions firmer and truer, for time and experience work these wonders in the faithful disciples of her profession. Will she still realize for us the picture of girlish charm and beauty that made her Trilby the most popular stage figure of its day? Well, we shall see what we shall see.

Hers is undoubtedly the most difficult task of the revival, for it seems hardly possible that Mr. Lackaye can fail to be as impressive a Svengali as before.

In the present cast most of the principal figures will be played by those who created the rôles when the play was first produced. For them to-morrow night will be an occasion for memories—pleasant memories for the most part, we have no doubt, though the tear of sympathetic regret is pretty sure to temper the sunshine of rejoicing at memory of one figure that is absent. When the congratulations are being spoken it will be well to pause for a moment to remember that fine gentleman of the old school—Mr. A. M. Palmer—to whom the theatregoers of the land owe their debt of gratitude for the first pleasures of the first "Trilby."

The book on which Paul Potter founded the play was one of the greatest sensations that the literary world has known in twenty-five years. It was natural, therefore, that the dramatic version of so widely read a story, when first produced ten years ago, should have run a close race for supremacy with the book itself in popular favor. In the recollection of even the oldest manager and theatregoer few such sensations can be remembered as the dramatic production of "Trilby" at the Garden Theatre.

\+ + +

It ran for many weeks, became the fad of the hour, and in a short time was being presented by special companies in all parts of the country. At one time there were nine organizations under one management appearing in this play. It was put on at the Garden Theatre with a strict observance of the highest standard of excellence in scenery and costumes of that day, and its presentation at the New Amsterdam Theatre to-morrow night, in all of the details of production, will probably represent the remarkable advancement since made in the externals of stagecraft.

Trilby Walked Through a Window.

WE were all intimately frightfully nervous, as Mr. Palmer's types were so pro[nounced] and were seriously wondering [how] the make-up we acters. It was with fear and trembling that I made my first entrance clad in the gray coat of a French officer, my bare feet thrust in List slippers.

What a relief it was when the tremendous reception I received told me that the audience, at least, thought I had realized Du Maurier's picture! Though the reception was a great gratification, still it unnerved me to such an extent that I made my exit out of the window instead of the door, in spite of the fact that the back drop represented housetops, as the studio was supposed to be up four flights of stairs; but nothing could dampen the enthusiasm of that audience. What a wonderful night it was! The calls, the cheers, and the packed house!

Mr. Beerbohm Tree was obliged to content himself with a gallery box. A year later I saw his production in London, and although his make-up as Svengali was the perfection of art, to my mind his performance was not equal to that of Mr. Lackaye.

However, I am told that Mr. Tree built His Majesty's Theatre out of the profits of "Trilby." With what enthusiasm the audience welcomed the different characters on their first entrance—Taffy, the Laird, Zou Zou, and dear Mme. Vinard, thus telling them how well they had done their work, how thoroughly they had realized Du Maurier's pictures.

At the fall of the final curtain I stood happily receiving the congratulations of my friends, (among them Mr. Paul Potter, who gave us "Trilby" as a play,) when I saw struggling through the crowd the pleased, kindly face of dear A. M. Palmer. Taking my hand he said, "Won't you allow your manager to congratulate you?" Then I felt my success was complete.

With the run of the play the Trilby craze increased. Everything was named after Trilby—hats, shoes, stockings, and toffy. The shade of gray which I wore in the second act became the fashionable color of the season and was called Trilby gray. But I think the climax was reached when as I was about to order my dinner one day I saw starred on the menu, "Pigs' feet, à la Trilby."

Virginia Harned

How Svengali Lost Money.

THE first night of "Trilby" was a remarkable occasion. For several seasons "book plays" had spelled failure, although in earlier years many successful dramatizations had been made, notably of Charles Reade's and Wilkie Collins's works.

Mr. Palmer was exceedingly doubtful regarding "Trilby," which had been done to fill out the season by Paul Potter, who was then his adapter and play reader. During rehearsal Potter told me that Palmer was frightened, and asked me to encourage him. I did so by offering to take a small interest instead of my salary as leading man of his stock company.

"Well, if it's good enough for you, I suppose it's good enough for me," he replied, to Potter's immediate delight and my subsequent disappointment.

Indeed, I am told that the Harpers, who had published the book, presented Du Maurier with their rights—a generosity which they hardly anticipated would amount to a gift of $100,000.

With all the pressure of the adapter, the company, and Mr. Presbrey, his stage manager and an unusually gifted one, Mr. Palmer had so little faith in the production that he canceled the first week in New England, fearing that a failure would ruin the Boston business.

The book had sold well, and was liked, and Du Maurier's illustrations had fixed the types in the minds of the reading public. As the various characters appeared the fidelity of the make-ups made the audience feel as if they were [meet] the battle was won. There were a dozen calls at the end of the first act.

When the second act ended there were two calls, and many glum faces. We did not realize then that it was sentiment and not disapproval which restrained the applause. The audience was so in the feeling of the play that they resented the kidnapping of Trilby by Svengali.

At the end of the third act the success was unequivocal. There were calls till the stage manager and the flymen were tired and the cast stopped counting. Mr. Palmer was finally obliged to thank the audience and remind them that there was another act to come.

I hurried into my street clothes and went to look for Potter, whose nervousness never allowed him to see his first nights.

I found him walking in the "Common," a block from the theatre, and no persuasion could bring him back. The success was so equally divided among author, adapter, stage manager, and cast that I hope it will not be thought egotism in one of the company to say that there has not been in recent years so overwhelming a tribute from an American audience.

Wilton Lackaye

Why Toffy's Whisker Grew Limp.

THERE were two brief impressions on the occasion of the first presentation of "Trilby" which made very vivid marks at the time. Basically, the absolute success or failure of the production was to be decided by the treatment and reception of the hypnotic idea. At the first rehearsal many almost violent discussions were held. Mr. Potter had not made the hypnotic thought the all-important one. He contended that it was safer to depend upon the love theme and the acknowledged strong atmosphere. Mr. Presbrey, who was a deep believer in the power of hypnotism, insisted that it would be possible for an artist of Mr. Lackaye's ability to hold his audience so spell-bound that there would be no fear of even a smile from the most skeptical or brainless. Mr. Potter finally agreed with him. Consequently the intensity of the thought in the minds of everybody on the stage, as well as those most deeply interested in the front of the house, can well be imagined. For my own part, I know that one of my whiskers began to grow limp from nervousness, but it soon returned to its normal state when the first curtain fell, and we knew that we were on the fair road saying good-bye to Trilby and Billee, I hastened to my dressing room, and later to the front of the house to see the final curtain fall. When I arrived there Mr. Palmer was in a very excited state and saying, "Will she never die?" The night before at the final dress rehearsal Miss Harned did such wonderfully good work that all of her fellow-artists lauded her to the skies. On the opening night she certainly held her audience, and unquestionably she could have lived for an hour longer, but sometimes managers think it best not to die hard. After another five minutes everybody interested in the management was worried. I learned later that it was because of the fact that the greater portion of the audience in Boston had trains to catch. But Trilby died within the time limit, and scored one of the biggest hits our stage has known.

Another deep impression was made by the manner in which everybody worked together for the common cause. I never witnessed a performance in which the entire cast so sunk their individual ambitions in their desire to reach the successful result which they did. It is a great pleasure to note that the same spirit is imbuing everybody during the present rehearsals.

When Zou-Zou Economized.

NATURALLY I cherish the memory of "Trilby"—it was the making of me. From an unknown quantity I jumped into prominence over night, and even to this day people to whom my many-syllabled name means nothing smile broadly at the mention of Zou-Zou, and give a more or less good imitation of my "Oh, La-la-la-la."

In the course of the pathetic farewell scene between Trilby and her faithful friends in the last act I used to give Miss Harned a boutonnière of fresh flowers, which were sent in for every performance by a near-by florist.

When the bill for the first month came in my valet, who was of a very economic turn of mind, thought it rank extravagance to spend over $30 a month for flowers. He countermanded my order, bought several pots of hyacinths, from which he cut a sprig for every performance.

For the first few days this scheme worked well; then the flowers, from the heat of the dressing room, began to fade. At last one night, as I was handing Miss Harned a rather wilted sprig, she looked while I was bending over her hand: "They are getting rottener every night."

This may not seem funny as I tell it, but the contrast between the expression of Miss Harned's face and her words was so irresistibly comical that we one and all burst out laughing and took ourselves off the stage as quickly as we could for fear that Trilby would die of laughter instead of heart failure.

Leo Ditrichstein

Mrs. Bagot's Memories.

PERHAPS the most marked feature to me of the first production of "Trilby" was its absolute freedom and smoothness of the agonizing jars and hitches which usually accompany a first night. The whole performance was as perfect in its smallest details as in the casting of the characters which so many remember to-day with unalloyed pleasure, that cast which Mr. Brady with his keen appreciation is to repeat as nearly as possible in the coming revival.

As an instance of the manner in which this performance impressed even professionals, I call to mind the case of an aged and well-known actress for whom I procured seats. Her delight was so great that she could never be induced to go again to a theatre, saying that she wished nothing to dim or efface the beautiful impression and delight which the performance of "Trilby" had given her.

Many things have hindered me from taking long engagements since the dear "Trilby" days, and those were only New York engagements, appearing with Miss Crosman in "Joan of the Shoals," in "The Last Appeal," and with Katherine Kennedy in "The Ruling Power," and now I come back to my widow's weeds as Mrs. Bagot, with the sincere hope that the play may tarry in New York for many days.

The Laird's Hunt for Dialect.

TRILBY" was, to my way of thinking, the most ideal production that I had ever been associated with. There was art and success in the air. Personally I was engaged for a short season at the Boston Museum, but the Mr. Palmer told erted every effort to bring it about, and finally succeeded in getting Mr. Field to release me.

When we opened at the old Park Theatre in Boston we absolutely lived "Trilby." Miss Harned, Mr. Ditrichstein, Mr. MacIntosh, "Little Billee," and myself supped together every night, and then drove home to the hotel where we were staying. "La vive de bohemie" was undoubtedly the inspiration for Du Maurier's "Trilby," and we lived the bohemian life thoroughly.

Although I am supposed to be a Scotchman, I had never played a Scottish dialect part in my life before, and I took particular pains to acquire the accent. I frequented sculptors' studios where Scottish artists were employed, and from one of them I got perhaps the best idea or the best key to the Scotch pronunciation that a man could possibly get.

I asked the man whether I could infuse any dialect into the word Trilby.

He said, "Ah, no, ye canna' do tha's ye'll hae to say plain Trulby."

That was quite enough for me.

Mrs. Youngbride's Expensive Spree.

FERDINAND," said Mrs. Youngbride, "I'm going on a spree."

Youngbride looked up from his newspaper with a glance of apprehension and then pretended to read again. When Alice called him Ferdinand he knew she was in earnest.

"A real spree, Ferdinand," continued Mrs. Youngbride. "And I'm going to spend, oh, ever so much money. For a year I've been cooped up in Blissville with our blessed baby. I've been to the city only once. Now that he is weaned I'm going to stay away four whole days. (Youngbride smiled.) Of course, I shall sleep with Angie. I've been invited to their house. Angie will go on a spree with me. She is a regular Bohemian, you know."

"Oh, very well," retorted Youngbride with as much sarcasm as he could command, "the town is wide open, and if the police should—"

"Ferdy," dear," coaxed Mrs. Youngbride, "how much money could you let me have. Would $10 be too much for a spree? You know you said your spree just after the baby was born cost—"

"Yes, yes," interrupted Youngbride, "but I'll tell you what I'll do. Cut your racket down to two days and I'll give you $20; there now," beaming magnanimously.

The compromise was accepted and the money handed over.

The house seemed very lonesome to Youngbride when he returned from the city next evening and found Alice gone. He went to the village hotel for dinner, and afterward hunted up three old cronies to come to his house for a game of draw.

The game was going merrily just after midnight, when there was a sound of hurried feet on the gravel path and an excited little woman flew into the hall kin," floated down to their astonished ears, "m-m-m-m- did she go away and leave him for years and years, his bes[t] mammy-m-m-m-m— did he cry much, Mary— good as gold, bless him— m-m-m-m. I just couldn't stay all night, although I was ready for bed. I dressed again and hurried for the theatre train, without waiting for my satchel. Ferdy," descending the stairs, "where are you? Why, good evening, gentlemen. Ferd, I thought you promised me never to play cards for money again. Oh, this smoke! Well, just clear off that table and bring up some more beer, that's a good man, while I get the chafing dish and the cheese. We'll have a Welsh rarebit, just like old times."

Next evening Mrs. Youngbride said: "Ferd, I'm not going on any more sprees. They cost too much."

"Money ran out, eh?" remarked Youngbride. "I'm glad of it."

Mrs. Youngbride read figures from the back of an envelope. It was her expense account. Two luncheons, for instance, cost 2[0] cents each. Six rides in the Subway were itemized at 60 cents, two continuous performance tickets at 25 cents each. There were sundry small charges for chocolate chips, peanut brittle, and ice cream sodas. The most expensive item was $1 for two hair dressings, Marcel style. "I just simply couldn't get along without that, Ferd," apologized Mrs. Youngbride. "There, the total is just $4.62—and I hope you're not going to be cross."

Youngbride smiled. "You must have considerable money left," he said, reaching out his hand as if to take it.

"The idea," said Mrs. Youngbride. "Why, I bought the loveliest white silk coat for baby, marked down from $12 to $12.98."

A Commuter's Notebook.

CLINTON J. HARVEY—that's my name. As for a real introduction, I don't know that I can do better than repeat the yarn that Swampscott spun the other morning after the business on the wires had slacked up and everybody sat still, hoping mightily that if anything did happen to make telegrams necessary it would occur some two hours later, when the new shift had come on. Then we began talking.

"Here's Harvey now," said Swampscott, starting his early morning run of jokes. "He's the real New York commuter. Makes a wild dash out to the Jersey coast every morning—usually has the car to himself—always, perhaps—that's when he sleeps, by all accounts. None of your 5:42 P. M., mad, hoi-polloi rush in his. Whole car—practically whole train—except for the bundles of newspapers that get kicked off at forty-odd stations.

"Yes, Harvey is the real commuter of all New York—the daddy of 'em all. The conductor takes a look at the baggage car, walks down the platform—you know that brisk yet stately, businesslike walk that all steam road conductors have—and then he pulls out his watch. The hand points to 4:03. It is time to start.

"'Is Mr. Harvey aboard?' he asks of the brakeman.

"'Yes, Sir,' the brakeman says.

"'Good!' says the conductor. 'Then we can pull out.'

"Then up goes the conductor's left hand to the engineer, and off the coast flyer goes.

"It's a great thing to be such a commuter that they start the trains by you."

Of course Swampscott exaggerated it a little, but a fellow does get proud of his train when he takes it at such an hour every morning and gets the feel of the road about as much as anybody can except the engineer, and can wake up off his rubber cushion pillow and tell just where he is by a glance out into the dawn—"so many more minutes to the junction," or, "just passed red house on the hill; time for another snooze."

Speaking of engineers reminds me of what Grafton—he's my engineer—said the other night.

"Mr. Harvey," said he, "it's a grand thing to be an engineer," said he, "and have a good run. It's another grand thing to know that.

"There was poor old Jones. Did I ever tell you about him? No? Well, he took the 4:48 out of Communipaw every afternoon—express, you know. Got gray in the service. Had a son who went into business college. Son got into good job, made a pile an' bought big farm down in Ocean County. Then he an' Mrs. Jones, they went to the old man an' said: 'Dad, you quit railroadin' an' settle down on the farm an' never have a worry—just fish an' eat an' read an' sleep.' That's what they said to him. Old Jones was fairly near the age limit—five or six years or thereabouts. He thought it over a while an' then resignated his job.

"He went down to the farm an' spent just two weeks fishin' an' eatin' an' sleepin' an' readin'. Then nothin' would do but he'd go back to railroadin'. Couldn't exist without it, said he.

"Well, they gave him his old run back. The very first trip, after gettin' past the meadows out there, he ran past his light an' bored his machine into the back of an old freight.

"What happened to him then? Oh, they picked him out dead."

"They'll be a whole lot of kids late to school in three Jersey counties this blessed morning, A. D., 1905," said the brakeman, with a look that I felt contained a bit of shame. Then he added:

"Bet the teachers themselves won't know it."

"Yes?" said I, politely. Parenthetically, it is impolite to ask too many questions or to seem too eager on any well-organized road.

"Yes," said he. "You see," said he, "we lost fifteen minutes back at the crossing there—you were asleep, eh?—an' the old man ain't made up but eight an' a half of 'em. Guess that you forgot that they set the watches of three counties by this train. The kids'll be late to school, of course. I'm goin' to give my kids five minutes extra on their breakfast. What's the use of beating the teacher to school?"

"What made us late?" I asked. Of course being late had made him look ashamed.

"Oh, I forgot," said he. "You were asleep, weren't you? It was only a cow on the track."

"I think," said I, "that I've got enough in my flask here to drink to the health of the cow that kept the youngsters of three counties late from school. Will you have a drink, Mr. Perkins? I hope that neither of us is too old to be glad that the kids had an excuse to keep 'em late from school. Those are my sentiments, any way."

"That's right," said he. "That sure is the proper spirit. I'm off duty—got my relief—an' I'll just go you."

And we had our drink—just enough to be polite.

He smacked his lips and then grinned. I looked inquisitive—just politely so.

"I was thinkin'," said he, "that it was a sort of queer toast that we have just been drinking to. The health of that cow, you remember."

"Yes?" said I.

"Yes," said he. "The cow is late and lamented pretty much up to the limit," said he. "We were goin' pretty fast, you know."

Yes, there's a lot of Jersey local pride in trains. Of course everybody gets worked up over taxation campaigns and plutocracy speeches and all of that, but Jersey is pretty proud of the big railroads that cross her map, and especially of the down-to-the-dot expresses that rip off the miles like watches, as far as regularity goes. It's a serious matter for a Jerseyman to delay one of these trains. They are the life of his community. They bring the Summer boarders, the mail, and the second editions of the big New York morning newspapers—to say nothing of the 6 o'clock evening extras at 4 P. M.

I had just turned over my air cushion the other morning to get a fresh grip on the nap question when a slight clatter pierced the roar of the train, and I felt an almost imperceptible tremor. Then the brakes went on hard. In a minute we began to back up hard. We pulled back for about a quarter of a mile, and there at the cross road at the side of the track was the wreck of what had been a fine farm wagon. Beside it stood its owner, a gray-haired old farmer. His coat was ripped up the back. His face was bleeding from half a dozen cuts, and one of his eyes was nearly smothered in a big bruise.

"Glad we didn't hit you," said the conductor consolingly from the rear platform.

"Oh, never mind me, boys," said the farmer. "I jumped. Guess somethin' was the matter with my watch this mornin'. Didn't think you were due here for more'n three minutes. But don't bother with me, boys. I'm all right. Go right along now. You're losin' time. There wan't no use of your comin' back. Go along now, I'll send the bill into the company in the mornin'. No, no—no hard feelin's. Don't bother about me, boys."

DR. WILLIAM OSLER.

Men of Mark Who Disprove the 60-Year Theory.

SEARCHING the beaches, as the Osler tide of discussion begins to ebb, one may find footprints in surprising numbers revealing masters of affairs whose usefulness not only is vital at sixty, but who at eighty years and upward are still in the ring. Nearly every branch of art and the professions, as well as business, is represented in the interesting category, which is perhaps a conclusive answer to the eminent Baltimore physician who suggests sixty as the average age limit for creative usefulness. His departure for Europe suggests reviewing the notable category.

General attention was recently focused upon Henry Gassaway Davis as a Vice Presidential candidate in his eighty-second year. His age made his nomination an innovation in the history of this country. Yet he is only one in hundreds of octogenarians who are virile and vigorous contributors to contemporary affairs. While he was the oldest candidate ever named on a Presidential ticket, the average age of our first and second citizens, since Washington became President at fifty-seven, has been within five years of threescore. Glance over them. William Henry Harrison was sixty-eight when he was inaugurated in 1841. Henry Clay was the same age when he was defeated by Polk. Lewis Cass was sixty-six when he ran against Zachary Taylor, as was Gen. Winfield Scott when he was defeated by Franklin Pierce. Only one candidate under forty years of age has ever appeared on a Presidential ticket—John C. Breckinridge, who took the Vice Presidential oath when thirty-six years of age.

Fortunately for a vast number of men notable in American affairs, the forty-year dead line drawn recently by the Interborough Rapid Transit Company in filling the places made vacant by the strike in this city is not for them. Yet, as a leading statistician ventured to THE SUNDAY TIMES, there are enough active and competent octogenarians in the city and country to run the Gotham railways with perfect dispatch and safety.

For of the male population of the United States—according to the latest census 38,616,448—176,571 are eighty years of age or over, 54,288 are eighty-five or over, 13,546 are ninety or over and 1,271 have survived their hundredth Winter. Approximately, in other words, one in 220 of the male population of this country reaches the age of eighty years; one in 700 the age of eighty-five, one in 3,000 the age of ninety, and one in 30,000 the century mark. Among them hundreds are active and powerful factors in making commercial, financial, and professional history to-day. So large, indeed, is the number of American octogenarians, to say nothing of the threescore aged, in the professions, that the citing of specific instances is apt to be misleading. Only a meagre percentage of our greater corporations are without a Director or executive officer past the Osler age limit.

Mention need hardly be made of Russell Sage, who, at eighty-eight, is still in harness; nor of Levi P. Morton, who is directing tremendous interests at the age of eighty-two; nor of William Alexander Smith, at eighty-four, the dean of the New York Stock Exchange; nor of William Sloan, whose eighty-eight years do not prevent him acting as Chairman of the Board of Directors of the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad; nor of D. O. Mills, octogenarian banker and Director in eighteen major corporations; nor of Chairman John A. Stewart of the Board of Trustees of the United States Trust Company, who is now preparing to celebrate his eighty-third birthday.

One of the most active members of the New York Chamber of Commerce is Jacob D. T. Hersey, who at eighty-three also personally directs an immense manufacturing business; while William H. Maller, at eighty-one years of age, is still engaged in the shipping trade with Australia and New Zealand. Charles Hayes Haswell, Dean of Tammany Hall and consulting engineer to the Board of Estimate and Apportionment, is now, at the age of ninety-six, revising the sixth edition of his textbook on mechanics and engineering. He was the first Chief Engineer of the United States Navy. Among other engineering veterans as active to-day as ever are General Manager Herman Haupt of the Northern Pacific Railway, in his eighty-eighth year, and Chief Engineer George E. Gray of the Southern Pacific, who, at eighty-six, is also President of the Board of Directors of the California Academy of Sciences.

Northern New York, as a health resort, points toward Albert E. Powers, the oil-cloth millionaire and banker, who directs his immense business personally at the age of eighty-seven. No one thinks of Andrew Carnegie as being superannuated at sixty-eight, nor does Boston so regard Chester W. Kingsley, octogenarian merchant, banker, philanthropist, and member of the Yale University Corporation.

Eminent attorneys, whose youthful vigor and interest in their profession are unimpaired by their eighty years are numerous. Among them are ex-Congressman Morrison, author of the Morrison Tariff bill, who is still practicing law in Illinois, and James Kerr Kelly, a former Senator from Oregon, who is a practicing attorney in his eighty-seventh year. A dean of the Baltimore bar is William Pinckney Whyte, who, among other things in his fourscore years, has been a Governor and United States Senator. He is to-day as active and vigorous as most men of half his years, and is still a vigorous rival of Arthur Pue Gorman, who succeeded him in the Senate.

Gaze over this eighty-years-young company, the October of whose lives is yielding a rich harvest, and one may find any number of clergymen who stand as sturdily in their pulpits to-day as when they answered their first calls. Dr. Theodore L. Cuyler, pastor of the Lafayette Avenue Baptist Church in Brooklyn, recently commemorated his eighty-second birthday by publishing a bulky volume of sermons. Dr. E. A. Park, Professor Emeritus at Andover Theological Seminary, whose sermons are notable for their argumentative power and wealth of illustration, was full of vigor to his ninetieth year, and that in spite of the fact that he was for fifty years, as he said, practically an invalid.

Dr. Samuel Harris deemed, as President of Bowdoin College, one of the profoundest theologians of the century, gave to the world after passing fourscore his views of Christian doctrine in two large volumes. Dr. William M. Paxton, until recently President of Princeton Theological Seminary, is eighty; Dr. Joseph Glass Monford of Cincinnati is ninety-four, and the Rev. Edward Everett Hale, the great Unitarian, only began to curtail his work at eighty-two years of age.

Prof. Huntington of the Columbian University in Washington, Dean of the faculty until 1900, is eighty-seven.

Among many eminent authors and artists whose activities are undiminished are Donald G. Mitchell, aged eighty-two; John Treat Irving, aged ninety-two; James R. Gilmore, (Edmund Kirke,) aged eighty-three; Thomas Wentworth Higginson, who is writing and lecturing at eighty, and, among the artists, Daniel Huntington and Eastman Johnson, respectively eighty-eight and eighty, portraits of eminent Americans by Johnson adorning galleries and public buildings in many cities.

\+ + +

Joaquin Miller, the Poet of the Sierras, is as prolific in his seventies as he was in his thirties, while Walt Whitman wrote some of his finest poems after passing his sixtieth year, as did Tennyson, Wordsworth, Goethe, and Milton. Probably the most indefatigable worker of the eighteenth century—who traveled 8,000 miles a year and preached more than 42,000 sermons in fifty years—who read and studied almost incessantly when walking or riding and who wrote, edited or translated 200 books—was John Wesley. On entering his eighty-third year he found himself just as strong to labor, as fit for mental and physical exercise, as when he was forty years old. He was a storehouse of energy to the very last, and a few days before his death, when eighty-eight years of age, rose at 4 in the morning, traveled eighteen miles, and preached a vigorous sermon.

These are only a few notable names, in a voluminous record of men who have retained their interest in affairs and have given bounteously of their maturest mental and physical vigor to the progress of their time. Without them and their work after sixty the human family would be missing more than it could easily afford to miss, even in a crowded day and age.

AT THE "ZOO."

To the Editor of The New York Times:

A member of the Zoological Society has just handed me a page of last Sunday's TIMES, entitled "What Happens When the Surgeon Visits the Zoo," with the remark that we "are the greatest fakirs in the animal business"! His indignation seems chiefly to have been aimed at the paragraph beginning as follows:

"Direator Hornaday tells of a curious experience one of the New York Zoological veterinarians recently had in trying to doctor an invalid hippopotamus."

It really seems necessary that I should correct certain statements contained in the article referred to.

I never told any one of any experience in doctoring an invalid hippopotamus anywhere. There is no hippopotamus in the Zoological Park.

"Gunda," our elephant, is not "a chronic sufferer from sore skin and abscesses," and we never gave him "massage treatment for abscess." His skin is perfectly healthy, and I think that no elephant is physically more sound and perfect than he. The photograph shows the process of oiling his skin, to keep it soft and pliable, as is done with all captive elephants.

"'Smiles,' another elephant of the Bronx Zoo," does not exist in the "Bronx Zoo"; but if he is a frequent victim of rheumatism I am sorry for him.

Lost Her Temper and Her Pictures

APROPOS of the woman with the ability to plan a big coup and who then loses it and her head at the last moment, an auctioneer in New York tells an interesting story. The woman was an American who had been living abroad with her husband for many years. Upon his death she returned, bringing with her a large collection of valuable paintings which had been his property, and which she hoped to sell. She made arrangements with the auctioneer to handle them for her, and he was delighted with the cleverness with which she had secured the pictures, and with the prices she had obtained for them. Then she began to haggle with him over the commission he was to receive. He had fixed it at 10 per cent. She wanted it reduced to 5 per cent. He refused. She then declared that she would withdraw the pictures from his hands and sell them herself. He told her that she could do as she pleased, but that he would not reduce his commission. She withdrew the pictures.

Then she began to find out that it was not so easy to sell pictures as she had thought it would be. She had no trouble in finding buyers, but she could not get the prices she had set on the pictures. Finally she went back to the auctioneer and asked him to take the pictures and sell them for her. He refused. He told her that he had had all the trouble he wanted with them, and that he would not touch them. She begged him to take them, but he refused. Then she became angry and abusive, and left the auctioneer's office.

Then she began to try to sell the pictures herself. She found that she could get no more than the auctioneer had told her she could get for them. She found that the auctioneer had been right in his estimate of the value of the pictures. She found that the auctioneer had been right in his estimate of the value of the pictures. She found that the auctioneer had been right in his estimate of the value of the pictures.

But by that time the woman was too angry to listen to advice. She considered that she had been badly treated. If the Custom House wished to keep her pictures from her, very well, they might have them. She tore up the guarantees, the pictures were sold for next to nothing, and scattered no one knows where.

The Lecturer's Holiday

THE professional lecturer, like other people, is now planning his Summer holiday, if he has not already arranged it. His Winter work is done, his stereopticon machine is laid on the shelf, and last season's manuscripts are back in his desk, only to be resurrected by special request. His audiences now want something new, and between this and August, when the lecture bureaus begin to arrange their tours, he must find fresh subjects to talk about when the long evenings are here, and people are ready to be amused and instructed again.

Summer and Winter equally are work times for the professional lecturer. The only difference is that in Summer he collects his material; in Winter he dispenses it—delivers the goods. The hard question for him is just what he shall deliver. About this time he has to make up his mind what people are likely to be interested in nine months hence. Then he must lay in a store of information and pictures—particularly pictures—dealing with that subject.

The search may take him across the world, and there is a chance, even then, that he may not get exactly what he went for, and may have to take what he can get. There is an even greater chance that before he returns something may happen which may make him wish he had gone to some other place and collected totally different material. It is very much like the dry goods merchant trying to determine what next Winter's fashions will be.

One of the best-known lecturers in this State sailed for Europe two weeks ago on his way through St. Petersburg to the Greater Russia which lies beyond the Caspian Sea. He hopes to get as far south as Afghanistan, for he believes that the next great international trouble will come between Russia and England, and that its scene will be the vast, almost unknown region between the Caspian, Persia, and the Indian border. If he is right he will be first in the lecture field with up-to-date pictures and stories of that region. If he is wrong, it will be an interesting country to talk about anyway, and sooner or later there is sure to be trouble in that direction.

But he may never be allowed to go so far. Russia regards the professional lecturer very much in the light of a magazine writer or newspaper correspondent, and she does not like either of these. So, unless his nerve and native resource carry him through, he may be turned back half way, and in that case he will have to seek material nearer at hand, perhaps in rural Russia or in picturesque Persia.

It is not an easy life, this professional globe-trotting and seeing strange lands. This same lecturer can tell of journeying to the Philippines soon after the victory of Manila Bay to talk with and photograph Admiral Dewey, only to find that the Admiral was too busy to see him. But, then, the lecturer was not easily discouraged, and finally by a ruse he succeeded in getting both his interview and his desired pictures.

He went to the Boer war and saw it from both sides in turn, which is more than the average war correspondent did; but he found that interest in the struggle in South Africa soon faded in America. That was not very comforting after the hard times he had had at the Cape.

The audience which listens to the lecture and looks at the pictures doesn't always realize the chances the lecturer took and the doubts with which he sometimes regarded his investment before the applause of his first night audience assured him that he had hit it again and that the public thought his judgment good.

A Damaging Admission.

Now and then in court counsel will elicit unlooked-for information when a witness is too closely questioned. A New Jersey lawyer was once endeavoring, during the course of a cross-examination, to serve his client by throwing suspicion on a certain witness.

"You admit," said the attorney, with the sternest air imaginable, "You admit that you were a constant visitor at the prisoner's abode during the six months referred to?"

"I do," replied the witness.

The lawyer smiled significantly. "Then kindly inform the court whether you and he were interested in any special transaction—business or otherwise."

The witness hesitated for a moment as if embarrassed. Finally, he replied: "Yes, we were."

"Umph!" muttered the attorney. Then, raising his voice, he continued:

"And now, no doubt, you will be so good as to let us know a little more of this. What was the nature of the business in which you had a common interest?"

"Well, Sir," cheerfully responded the witness, "if you really insist on knowing, I suppose I must tell. The fact is, I was courting his niece!"

THE HISTORY OF CHAMPAGNE—No. 4.

IT WAS DOM PERIGNON, the Monk who discovered Champagne, who also found the secret of imparting further delicacy by the addition of just the right proportion of very old, rare wine and a bit of liquer. His secret is known to the makers of

Great Western Extra Dry

Not only have we the perfect art of making Champagne, but also conditions of soil to produce fruit of certain peculiar, spicy, yet mellow qualities. The soil is the first requisite. Rheims, of New York, (the scene of America's oldest and most carefully cultivated vineyards) produces grapes equal to the famous Rheims of France—hence, Great Western, the only American Champagne acknowledged by experts to equal the foreign product—at half the price. The cost of the wines is the same—the duty makes the difference in the price you pay.

THE ERIE SINCE 1851

Its Capacity During Year of Completion Compared with that of To-day

"A GIGANTIC and Stupendous Enterprise," "The Work of the Age," were terms with which the Common Council of the City of New York in 1851 hailed the completion of the Erie Railroad. That year it carried 688,780 passengers and 250,000 tons of freight.

LAST year the number of passengers carried by the Erie equalled the combined population of the states of New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio and Indiana, and the freight tonnage exceeded the loading capacities of all the ocean going vessels in the world.

Americans Fear Color in Sculpture

Brilliant Colors Were Used in Sculpture and Architecture by Greeks of the Great Epoch--We Should Go Back to First Principles, Says This Critic.

SCULPTURE is taking such a place in the art of to-day that it bids fair to wrest the first rank from painting, and, while architecture is bound hand and foot to the chariot of commerce, emancipate itself to some degree from the trammels of convention and develop into an independent art. Not that the great majority of statues modeled to-day and turned into marble by the artisan or into bronze by the founder are properly to be included among works worthy of preservation; but that in the mass of poor statuary clawed together out of the patient clay one sees now and then a hint that the art of the sculptor may have a rebirth, provided the coming generation has the wit to sift the wheat from the chaff and insist that the price of masterpieces shall not be paid to masters of the commonplace.

Nothing in art is quite so easy to do as modeling in clay; no branch of art is more weighed down by mediocrities than sculpture. As it is accepted to-day, sculpture does not demand of its professors anything more than architecture, viz., the intelligence to crib ideas wherever found and after mulling them over enough—to ruin what little good was once in them—produce them as original work. Any ordinarily bright artisan can set up as a sculptor when he has a few courses in an art school back of him, provided he can pay for a studio. And if he has a few friends he may secure a commission without much fear that the committee who will examine his model can tell good from bad. And so it comes about that our battlefields of Gettysburg and Chattanooga are covered with bronze and stone monuments which testify to the patriotism and wealth of cities and towns of the United States, but also, alas, to the deep ignorance, nay, one may say the amazing impudence, of hundreds of sculptors who could not carve a newel post in a craftsmanlike way.

As in architecture, so in this wholesale sculpture, there is a commercial instead of an artistic origin to it; there are behind it "jobs" (sweet word!) and a very extraordinary pouring out of money, considering the wretched objects acquired. Apparently our vaunted acuteness deserts the Monument Committees taken here and there "from our midst," for, while always striving to drive a bargain, they are most unmercifully plucked, as all men must be who venture on a field they know nothing of without taking advice of experts. Innocent of a distinction between bronze and spelter, between one marble or another, unable to distinguish sound, well-cast and well-finished metal work from the tricky products of factories, they pay the price of the best for the worst sort of output and so, between bad sculptor and bad material, they cumber the earth with statuary of the most disheartening kind.

These are probably hopeless and must be left to their fate, since they are too wedded to their idols, their belief that any man can do pretty much anything without long training, to expect them to change. But with regard to statuary of a higher class, produced by men and women of talent and training, there is a danger which may be avoided in some degree.

The danger is the monotony that has befallen sculpture owing to mistaken ideas as to the purpose of the art and what the art was in the great epochs of its flowering. When you walk about the Rotunda of the Capitol at Washington or down the Sieges-Allee in Berlin you begin to realize what it is for nations to borrow ideas in art from other ages and other climes without regard to their own people and climate. They always borrow the wrong thing. If it is in any way possible, they begin at the wrong end and copy the least appropriate thing first, or, as the homely farm phrase has it, put the cart before the horse. All that white marble in the rotunda, all those groups and busts and benches of white marble in the Sieges-Allee are there because a hundred years or so ago it was assumed that the Greeks left their marble statues white. The assumption rested on marbles made by Romans, some of which, though by no means all, were left untinted, just as they came from the polisher's hand. Wherefore we had the cold, glittering statues of Canova and Thorvaldsen and the dismal statues and groups of the American, British, French, and German sculptors who made Rome their Mecca. As usual, they began at the wrong end, and even so, did not know how to go about it. Instead of lingering in Italy, they should have pressed on to Greece, and there, inducing Governments to explore and dig up what statuary remained in the earth, satisfy themselves what that sculpture really was which made Greece the most famous land on the globe. What thousands of hopeless inanities in nice, clean, respectable Carrara, sweetly suited for Brussels carpets and hideous window curtains might not have been spared the Victorian age in England and those arid years befo' the wah here in youthful America!

The marble from the Pentelican Hill near Athens has a good deal of iron in it which sometimes shows in minute grains when polished, and is said to be the cause of the yellow tinge on the weathered sides of Parthenon and Propylaia. The east end of the Parthenon seems to have oxidized more than any other part, some stones having turned pale orange, others a rust color. But in their architecture and in their statues as well the Greeks did not wait until weathering removed the dazzling whiteness of the freshly polished Pentelic marble; they painted or tinted column and architrave, placed salient colors on the background of the metopes and on the triglyphs; brilliant also were the decorative mask and leaf forms on the corners of the roof; less bright, perhaps, the reliefs carved on the wall under the porches that ran round the Parthenon and similar temples. So at Olympia the architecture has been proved to have had brilliant colors by finding the stones themselves. And as to statuary—well, if the popular statuary, the terra cottas of the graves and temple catchalls did not prove it, the brightly colored statues of Parian marble found on the Acropolis in 1885 would remove all doubt. Fourteen draped female figures were discovered, their hair tinged reddish, lips and eyeballs colored, their robes enameled with brilliant colors to simulate embroidery; they wear bracelets and diadems and big gold earrings in place, says Ernest Gardner:

"The effect of this coloring, whether on face or garments, is to set off and enhance by contrast the beautiful tint and texture of the marble. Those who have only seen white marble statues without any touches of color to give definition to the modeling and variety to the tone can have no notion of the beauty, life, and vigor of which the material is capable."

For our marble statues we use Carrara, which has the advantage, if in truth it be so great an advantage after all, of supplying large blocks of a very even, cheesy, fine-grained, and dead-white stone, but the distinct disadvantage that it does not grow old beautifully like Pentelic and Parian. But the worst of it is that, caught as ever in the copyist's error, we follow Roman instead of Greek precedent, and try to make ourselves believe that this dead-white Carrara is beautiful. The natural instinct rebels. No child cares for a white Carrara statue; if the subject interests it for a moment, the material tires. There are, however, still many people who think there is something holy in the absence of color; through some fantastic involution of asceticism with aestheticism they fancy there is merit in cold white marble and naughtiness in rose color. Which reminds one that there are people who are shocked if you say God, with a short o, and beg you to say Gawd, as more reverent to your Creator!

Our danger is in this painful narrowness which seems peculiar to Northern Europe and North America, showing itself in a constricted art expression, a timid use of the natural advantages of a splendid climate, not unlike that of Greece for many months in the year, a squalid dependence on a parcel of European masters who themselves are rather scant of brains, heart, and knowledge. Ours is a land that calls for splendid color effects. What are these dull bronzes doing in our parks when they might so easily shine with the beauty of strong colors? Why these rows of desperately ugly and uncouth worthies all in white Carrara, when in Tennessee and Vermont we have marbles and granites of almost any tone required? In fact, our sculpture ought to go back to first principles and start with carved wooden figures painted, gilded, and tinted, in order to learn that lack of color is not necessarily good taste, and that the grain of wood is as important as the grain of marble. We have taken sculpture from the wrong end, and the error is still dogging us like any other crime against the right. We must have polychrome sculpture, and that quickly, or the people will revolt against the stupid things that pass for sculpture and the art will perish.

Some attempts have been recently made in New York to escape the disagreeable effect of newly cast and burnished bronze. There have been artificial patinas, of course, but the cases to which allusion is made are gilt statues. The "Sherman" of Saint Gaudens and the "Alma Mater" of French have been gilt, though it may be that the natural ingredients of the city air would by this time have given both these statues a natural patina finer than their present gold-beater's skin.

The illustration shows Miss Alice Cooper's bronze figure of Sacajawea, the Indian squaw who served Lewis and Clark as a guide in their voyage of discovery across the plains of the Northwest. It is for the exposition at Portland, Oregon, and was cast this week at the Henry-Bonnard Bronze Foundry. The bronze has received a patina, but not a green or a very brown one. The other illustration is one of the four groups representing continents, by Daniel C. French, which will stand on advanced pedestals on the Bowling Green front of the new Custom House. They are to be carved in a Tennessee marble of a reddish gray tone. May we not hope that the statuary on the façade itself will have some strong if not brilliant color, so that New York shall begin the transformation of sculpture from a cold and repellant formalism into something youthful and passionate?

FOLLOWED THE FASHIONS.

THE little daughter of a fashionable mother is accustomed to hear a great deal about the things that have "come in" or "gone out" of style. After a visit to Sunday school she attempted to repeat to her younger brother some of the miracles performed by our Lord. He was a most attentive listener, and when she had finished said:

"Do you believe that, sister?"

"Why, of course I believe it, Jacky. It is true."

"I didn't know things could really happen like that."

"Oh, they don't now," she replied in a superior tone. "All that sort of thing was years ago and has gone entirely out of style."

Upon one occasion she had visited several stores with her mother during the Autumn millinery openings. As they were returning home they passed a market, with its wares displayed in the window.

"Oh, Mamma!" she cried. "Look, quick! Turkeys are coming in style again. The windows are full of them."

A NEW STORY OF WASHINGTON.

AT a recent meeting of the Washington Heights Chapter of the D. A. R. the Regent related a story of Washington and the Jumel Mansion which was new to those present, and runs as follows:

Washington and Aaron Burr had met in the council chamber to discuss certain matters connected with the Revolution, when they were startled by seeing a band of 500 Indians coming up the roadway. These latter presented themselves to the "Great White Father," and asked him to smoke the pipe of peace with them. This he and Burr proceeded to do with alacrity, and when the ceremony was completed and the Indians had turned to go, Washington heaved a sigh of relief and said: "I never in my life was so delighted to see the backs of a delegation!" Whereupon Burr asked if he were not glad that they had only desired that he should smoke the pipe of peace with them.

"Yes, very glad, indeed," Washington is reported to have replied, "but for two lone white men to smoke the pipe of peace with 500 Indians isn't such an unalloyed pleasure after all!"

Men Who Are Making the World a Neighborhood

NEW YORK has never played host to a more distinct or distinguished company of visitors than the 300 International Railway Congressmen who made eyes at the metropolis during several days last week, prior to moving on Washington. Representing the railway interests of thirty-three countries, approximating in value twoscore billions of dollars, and controlling 550,000 miles of rail, these men dominate an empire, so to say, upon which the sun never sets—over which the locomotive races from sun to sun. They are making the world a neighborhood.

Germany, Russia, France, England, Belgium, Italy, Switzerland, Spain, Danish lands, Asia, South America, Australia, and Canada are among the countries represented, many of them governmentally, in the visitation.

Prominent in the English delegation is Sir George Armytage, a founder of the congress and President of the Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway. As a reward for his eminent services in the promotion and extension of railways in the United Kingdom Sir George was recently knighted. In the English railway world he is of an industrial peerage which includes such names as Lord Cawdor, Chairman of the Great Western Railway; Lord Stalbridge, head of the London and Northwestern Railway; Sir Andrew Fairbairn and Sir Henry Oakley of the Great Northern Railway; Sir Charles Owens, and others of similar magnitude.

Sir George Armytage is a foremost European authority on operating railroads with the greatest combined speed and safety. Large of fame and frame, and of a mental alertness more American than English, Sir George has come to be known in English railroading as the Great Liberal.

Frankly open to conviction, Sir George purposes studying with his own eyes the most approved American railway methods and, wherever practicable, to apply the results in practice as well as theory. His voice is of a calibre that carries far, and his steel-gray eyes have in them something of the searching quality of the radium ray. First and foremost among the discoveries which have thus far moved him to applause [illegible] way tunnels and terminal depot now being constructed in and under New York. It was after a day spent in the Subway and under the North and East Rivers that Sir George talked with a writer for THE TIMES at the Waldorf.

\+ + +

"This is my first real visit to the United States," he volunteered. "I say real, because, while I have seen and been on the surface of the country previously, I had never explored underneath—the amazing wonderland—underworld—which has been opened up since my last visit to America.

"Our English eyes perhaps are not quite strong enough to see and comprehend from a distance of 3,000 miles the remarkable development or rather transformation which the States in general and this city in particular have been undergoing in recent months, not to say years.

"Being a practical railroader myself and consequently interested in matters of speed—rapid transit—I am yet astonished at the rapidity and comparative comfort with which New Yorkers travel above and under ground. London has been fairly distanced. Whether she will catch up remains to be seen—at any rate, London might study profitably the transportation facilities in operation and projection over here.

"But, while I find speed and comfort so highly developed, I do not find any great regard for safety. Life must be a cheap affair, so much merchandise, when it is fed into the speedy, though comfortable, vehicles such as find favor, without fear, among you younger and strenuous people."

Sir George cited the mortuary statistics which show that in 1900 there were 58,000 persons killed and injured in this country. In 1901 there were 61,000; in 1902, 73,000, and in 1903 the figure leaped to 86,000 persons killed and injured, of whom nearly 10,000 were killed. In other words, more persons are annually killed and injured in the United States than in the whole of Europe. In the United Kingdom, for instance, there are seldom more than a dozen persons annually killed outright in railroad accidents.

"Of course, America has some 250,000 miles of railway in operation against [illegible] miles in Europe," he continued. "On the other hand—and here is one reason perhaps for the alarming number of accidents in the United States—the cost of roads and equipments in Europe is [illegible] 100,000,000, as against [illegible] 000 in America with its third more mileage. Then, too, European railways carry on an average 5,700,000,000 passengers yearly, while those in America carry but 700,000,000 approximately.

"Perhaps there is something significant in a few further figures," pursued the eminent knight of the rail. "For example, your American roads carry annually some 1,200,000,000 tons of freight against 1,250,000,000 pounds in Europe. But mark this interesting fact: European and American railroad receipts are virtually the same—about $1,800,000,000 a year."

"What, in your opinion, accounts for the excessive number of railway accidents over here as compared with the number abroad?" was asked. It elicited the diplomatic reply:

"Americans are progressing so rapidly, and are, furthermore, so ambitious to progress more rapidly still, that they apparently are willing to sacrifice safety to speed every time. But, to my mind, a large percentage of accidents over here might be prevented by the abolition of crossings on the same level as the abutting land.

"All over the United States you have unguarded crossings, where wagons and pedestrians pass directly on the railbed. Then, of course, the national frenzy of hurry results in more or less defective construction not only in locomotives and cars, but in roadbeds themselves—the base of the trouble."

\+ + +

Vice President Dietler of the St. Gothard Railway, one of the most remarkable railroads on earth, will during his stay in America visit and inspect a number of mountain roads, among others the railways up Mount Washington and Pike's Peak, as well as the transcontinental lines threading the Rockies.

Switzerland, he confessed, has in many respects been eclipsed as a land of romantic railroading by lines operated and projected in remote Persia, Arabia, and the Holy Land, remoter India, among the Himalayas, and the remarkable Oroya Railroad, the highest on earth, in Peru.

"Before long," remarked M. Dietler, "the sound of the locomotive whistle will be as familiar in the Garden of Eden and Mecca, as well as the fabled heart of Africa, as in noisy Paris and London or [illegible] New York. Frankly [illegible] biased viewpoint, since Switzerland looks abroad for her railroads, the United States has been slow—torpid—in introducing American rails and rolling stock into the dimmer corners of civilization. Germany, for example, wears glasses constantly focused upon those sections of Europe and Asia which are yearning to be developed by railways. I myself have nothing but the highest regard for American vehicles and railroad construction, and the recent order for 200 locomotives placed with an American firm by Japan should awaken this country to the vast field awaiting development outside the States.

"I expect some such results from the convening of the International Congress in Washington—it should, in fact, mark the beginning of a new era for American railroading, besides affording us foreign railroad men an opportunity of seeing and hearing more of American methods than has hitherto been generally possible," concluded this French visitor.

M. Prosper Le Blanc of France, during several years spent as a locomotive salesman—a novel business, that, taking a line of locomotives on the road—has acquired a knowledge of international railroading possessed by few men living.

"While," said M. Le Blanc, "our railroads in France are ostensibly controlled and operated by private persons, our railway companies are far more restricted as to liberty than yours. We, for instance, construct and run our lines under Government concessions, or practically Government inspection—surveillance. Between 1950 and 1960 most of those concessions will have expired and the Government will itself own and most likely operate the lines.

"Despite the laughable verdict of your greatest humorist as to the rapidity of locomotion abroad, we have made tremendous strides since M. Twain was a tramp abroad," continued the speaker.

"I remember," continued M. le Blanc, "a very characteristic example of wide-awake Americanism that came to my notice in Japan some years ago in connection with the introduction of American locomotives in foreign markets. Since Japan has just placed a large order for locomotives with an American firm it may be interesting to recount the incident. An American, a German, and a Frenchman [illegible] besides my own, were [illegible] exhibit locomotives on the Kiushiu Railway. Owing to some mishap, my own firm withdrew from the competition before the day for the test came. All three competing engines made a good showing in the endurance tests, so that the securing of the order depended upon the speed trials over a ninety-mile roadbed. The German and English engines were tried first, in the order named. When the American engine had gone about half the course her engineer suddenly discovered that something was wrong—the drive wheels were revolving at a sixty-mile-an-hour rate, but the engine was scarcely covering a mile in two minutes. Coming to a stop and descending from his cab, the engineer discovered that the rails were ingeniously soaped—yes, soaped, and evidently by a rival in securing the order. Perhaps it is needless to add that the matter was referred to the Directors of the road, and the American firm, after another trial, secured the commission."

\+ + +

That Spanish prejudice against the United States, awakened by the recent war, is not insurmountable is evident in the presence of Managing Director Maristany of the Madrid, Saragossa, and Alicanye Railway, as a delegate to the congress.

"While here," said Señor Maristany, "I will make a careful study of American methods and products in the railway line. Spain is in the somewhat tardy position of your, what is his name, Rip Van Winkle—yes? We have, it is true, some of the best railway accommodations in Europe, but Spain is looking toward the railroad as her commercial and also agricultural savior, so to say. Our future development depends upon the building and operation of more and better roads, and if America can deliver the goods, she has an equal chance with other countries to furnish them."

\+ + +

Manager H. P. Burt of the Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway comes from distant India with praise for American bridge construction as equal, if not superior, to the bridges of any other trade mark. India, he said, is being freckled with American steel bridges, and they have uniformly given satisfaction as safe and sane engineering achievements.

\+ + +

[illegible] is represented at the [illegible] for the [illegible] operation of the [illegible] ported order placed by the Russian Government with Charles M. Schwab, M. Tolstopiatoff said: "In the absence of any official confirmation of the report, it is, of course, problematical. But that the United States is as well, if not better, prepared to furnish first-class battleships on short notice as or than any other maritime country, there can be no question. We have learned from experience and observation that American railroad engineering is not excelled anywhere, and, because of the amicable relations between the two countries, coupled with the natural and industrial ability of the United States to contrive and construct war vessels such as we need, your shipyards may regard us as a big customer."

Strange to say, remarked another Russian railway official, the Siberian Railway has done thrice the business during the past year of any previous twelvemonth since its completion.

"The present war," he continued, "is rousing the dormant energies of the empire in a most amazing way. In fact, it bids fair to prove the long-prayed-for spur to industrial Russia. Since the outbreak of the war the number of passengers carried on the various Russian railroads has been gradually increasing until railway investors are realizing handsome dividends. While the roads between St. Petersburg and Moscow, and also between Moscow and Odessa, show the greatest prosperity, the Siberian Railway is a good third. Why? Because every encouragement is being given farmers and merchants along the route to persuade crops and produce such manufactured products as the masses of men at the front need. The army is proving to be the best customer the Russian farmer and merchant ever had, and the main go-between is the Siberian Railway."

M. Ernest Gerard of Belgium, Acting President of the International Congress, in the absence of President Arthur Dubois, in discussing the much-mooted rebate question now agitating this country, said that French railway tariffs were strenuously regulated so that the railways were forbidden by law to depart from them in any way, shape or form. "But," he pursued, "we have no industrial corporations—or rather trust combinations, as you call them—in control of our railroads. All our tariffs are published openly and are subject to public inspection. There is also [illegible] rebates [illegible] secret, entering into the question at all in any part of the world."

Graphic Picture of the Morocco Seaport on an Occasion Which His German Majesty Has Made Memorable—Cordially Welcomed by a City in Oriental Gala Attire.

Tangier, April 22.

WHATEVER was the purpose of the German Emperor's visit to Tangier, he could hardly have received a more cordial or brilliant welcome than that which was given him by this little city. Any one fortunate enough to visit it at the same time saw this charming bit of the Orient en fête.

Its low, whitewashed houses climb a hill above the pretty, shallow harbor, and the towers of two mosques gleam, green and gold, in the sun. All is dazzling—the blue and white walls, the sea, and the flags of every nation flying from the different legations. Here and there an isolated palm tree completes one's first glimpse of an African city, rising from the Atlantic on the one side and on the other from the wide yellow beach that curves until it borders the green foothills of the Atlas Mountains on the opposite side of the harbor.

But the stranger soon forgets picturesque effects, as the problem of how to land presents itself by the flight of dozens of rowboats pitching and rolling about in the waves, making their way uncertainly toward the steamer. As they approach the Moorish boatmen are not only seen, but heard, and their screams and yells add to the impression of some imminent danger. The native guide who has been urging his services upon you all the way from Gibraltar now sees his chance, and takes possession of your person and your luggage, to your infinite relief, and before you know it you have taken the fatal leap into the dancing boat, with your suitcase, umbrella, and kodak, and are passed on from one shouting Moor to another over oranges, fish, trunks, and valises. The boat at last pushes off, and it is with a feeling of shipwreck that you watch the quick motions of the oarsmen (still shouting) as each succeeding wave is survived, and the city once more becomes a picturesque possibility. Surprisingly soon the long, narrow pier is reached, festive with numberless German flags, alternating with the scarlet of Morocco, all blowing briskly in the fresh sea breeze that is constant at Tangier.

Feeling like some person of state, you climb the ladder wreathed with eucalyptus and the fresh yellow blossom of the mimosa, with which the entire pier is trimmed. Walking to the end, where Oriental rugs of bright Morocco colors are being unrolled for the Emperor's landing, you enter the Orient by way of the Custom House. Your chief impression is of screaming and confusion. Handsome bearded men in white turbans nod and wave you on to the street. It is filled with natives in white coarse garments thrown over their heads, and poverty stricken donkeys. There is not a vehicle of any description in Tangier, as there would be no room for one. The street winds up a hill between two high whitewashed walls, and you walk through the first Moorish gateway over uneven and almost untreadable stones. Past the forbidding walls and prison door of the Mosque you see the shops of the Pacayers. In little square rooms like boxes, one side open to the street, squatted dignified Moors on straw mats beside a pile of flat leather books, peaceful and unoccupied. The place seems like a street on exhibition at some World's Fair, and it is difficult to realize that the scene is a real one that is playing its part in the international fair of Europe.

We were not long in discovering that the Emperor's visit was the cause of unusual excitement and preparation. All the city had been whitewashed—indeed, it might be called an Oriental "spotless town."

"The Sultan appropriated $60,000 for the Kaiser's reception," said an Englishman from Fez. "Probably $20,000 was used and the rest is in the pockets of the Government officials. The people are making a great fuss over the Kaiser, for they think he will get them out of the hands of the French, who have just sent a mission to the Sultan to secure even greater privileges for themselves."

There are many stories and political wherefores gossipped about Tangier, locally known as Tangerines. Diplomacy is in the air, and nobody who really knows cares to admit the truth of anything. The rivalry of the different nations is so great that they do not enjoy entertaining each other socially, which seems a great pity, in view of the beautiful villas and luxuriant gardens overlooking the sea where the foreign colony lives. Many of these surround the marshau, or open field, and here, the afternoon before the Emperor's visit, the Berber cavalry from the Atlas Mountains were rehearsing their "powder play." Only the background of the desert was needed to complete a brilliant Arab picture. Twenty abreast, they charged on their dashing gray Barbary horses, their white burnooses flying like banners, when, with a rush like the wind, they wave their guns in the air for the final charge and fire. Troop after troop we watched, magnificently mounted, with yellow, scarlet, and blue trappings, shouldering their heavy rifles embossed with silver, and inlaid with ivory, that have descended from father to son for generations. Hundreds of tents were pitched at the end of the marshau, for the Sultan had sent his swiftest riders to be reviewed by the Kaiser. There could not be imagined a more thrilling spectacle for a royal guest than these wild, picturesque horsemen.

The socco, or market place, was one mass of Oriental life. The sword dancer, the snake charmer, and the story teller were surrounded by impenetrable groups of men and women looking like bundles of burlap. The black slave, who carries water in a goatskin slung over his back, was ringing a bell and offering a very doubtful commodity in shining brass cups hung on a chain. Dejected donkeys laden with everything from a native to a water keg, bundled up the street to the cries of "Arra" and "Barrak" from the driver, who somehow succeeds with a good deal of beating in steering his donkey through the crowd. But there was a singular absence of begging. Only a few half-blind women were chanting in the socco a beggar's rhythm to Allah, with apparently no expectation of receiving anything. On remarking this the Englishman explained:

"The Emperor is again responsible for this luxury. Of course they wanted no nuisances about to-morrow, so they collected all the beggars this afternoon and locked them in the prison for a few days' sojourn."

Tangier took no rest that night. They were crying, shouting, and hammering till morning. Arches of flowers were thrown across the streets, windows and walls decked with great victory palms, and over doorways were arches of calla lilies embedded in green. Oriental rugs were thrown out from the windows, and flags of every color and description hung gayly from the balconies. By 6 o'clock in the morning the sun shone brightly down upon Tangier assembled on the roofs of their houses. On top of the mosque a group of women was huddled, and a row of white cowled heads looked down on the street below, with more curiosity than one would expect of a Moslem on top of his mosque. Out in the harbor everything was glistening and dancing in the sunlight, and even the French warships reflected the brilliancy of the morning, while the fresh breeze from the Atlantic heralded the royal yacht. All eyes were strained to catch the first glimpse of her as she rounded the point into the harbor. At last there was a faint white spot, something like a bird, there was a booming of cannon, and the Emperor had been sighted.

Those who were not on the roof were watching a scene that could not have been more brilliant were it the climax of an opera. Soldiers in scarlet and fez lined each side of the street, squatting Oriental fashion from time to time; their officers in orange or green were giving orders, while their horses stood under a balcony, literally caparisoned with every gorgeous color. Others were strewing flowers in the road, and a group of Moorish boys, holding banners decked with nosegays and silk scarfs, took up their position in front of an arch. While over a balcony a group of chattering Spanish women had hung long fringes, embroidered crêpe shawls, greens, pinks, and tropical birds on ivory backgrounds—a dado for their bright faces framed in white mantillas and pink roses. Further along, framed in an arch of eucalyptus, sat the Jewish maidens in antique costumes and headdresses and barbaric jewelry. Opposite these were the musicians of Tangier, with their lutes and rebecs, who compose the café chantant and render dirges and laments over their lost Alhambra.

Now the legations rode to the pier in full uniform, each legation headed by four handsome Moors in flowing native dress. At last, after much waiting, there was another salute from the cannon, and a soldier galloped up the street to announce that the Emperor had landed. It was not many minutes before the cavalcade was winding up the hill; two lines of foot soldiers walking inside the mounted troops who accompanied the venerable uncle of the Sultan, who received the Kaiser. Then followed Sir Harry MacLean, known as Kaid MacLean, the English Director of the Sultan's troops, wearing the turban and red and gold embroidered tunic. Finally the German Ministers, with the Kaiser riding a pure white Barbary horse, with a white embroidered bridle. He paused under an arch of flowers, while hundreds of papers flew down, bearing the words "Welcome to the Kaiser" in Spanish or Arabic. He looked as pleased as his Imperial Majesty would permit, and considering the rumor the French had circulated of a plot to assassinate him. He was formally received at the German Legation, but it was much to be regretted that the imperial schedule did not allow him to remain longer in Tangier to accept all the honors that had been prepared for him.

The Man In The Street

A PROMINENT Tammany politician has a wife who is a model of all the domestic virtues. Among her other accomplishments is a talent for making home-made bread, and she naturally takes a great pride in having her loaves turn out well. One evening recently she had finished setting the batch of dough to rise in the kitchen, and was resting herself reading in the parlor, when the silence was disturbed by her six-year-old son, who came running upstairs crying, "Mamma, mamma! there's a mouse jumped into your bread pan!"

The good woman was much perturbed, and frantically asked, "Did you take him out?"

"No'm, but I done just as good; I threw de cat in, an' she's diggin' after him to beat de band!"

GEORGE W. PERKINS tells this story of his last visit to California when he drove out to inspect some magnificent orange groves. At one place the luscious fruit hung most temptingly from the branches, and Mr. Perkins was very anxious to pick and eat some of the oranges fresh from the trees. He was deterred, however, by a huge sign threatening the severest penalties of the law to any person caught picking oranges from the trees.

Approaching one of the overseers, Mr. Perkins made known to him his longing wish to pick and eat an orange direct from the tree.

"I don't want to get in any trouble, though," [illegible] to the sign, "but I'm awful hungry, and I'd like to get an orange."

"Dat sign is put there for de purpose of keepin' off de flies," was the contemptuous reply. "If you want to pick a few go ahead and do it. That sign is put there for those who drive up here and want to pick a load."

SIMEON FORD tells of some amusing experiences of a lady he knows who is most charitably disposed toward the poor of the slums. One day this worthy woman in the goodness of her heart visited a small boy in whom she was interested and who was convalescing from a long illness. With her she carried some fine fruit for the lad; but to her surprise the mother received the offering rather dubiously, evincing little appreciation of or gratitude for what the charitable lady thought would be most acceptable to the little sufferer.

When next the good Samaritan called at the place she asked the mother how the boy had enjoyed the fruit.

"Very well," was the laconic answer.

"And did he eat all of it?"

"Oh, yes," responded the mother, carelessly; "he got away with it all right; but the boy is like me, he don't care much for frills; likes something substantial and tasty, fr instance, pig's feet."

ARNOLD DALY, who has made such a good thing of Bernard Shaw and who speaks of bringing that lively Irishman to this side next Winter, is involved in the following:

Miss Louise Closser, who played Prossy the typewriter in "Candida" last season, told the story at a well-known dramatic school the other day.

"When I resolved to go upon the stage," said Miss Closser, "being still a young thing, I went to Mr. Frohman's office and asked for an engagement.

"'Is Mr. Frohman in?' I asked.

"'Naw,' said the office boy, without changing his position or raising his eyes.

"'Then I'll wait,' said I. I waited an hour in silence. Then it occurred to me to put a simple question. I addressed the still absorbed office boy.

"'When will Mr. Frohman be in?'

"'He ain't goin' to be in,' he answered shortly. 'He's in Europe.'

"Naturally I retired after that. When I went into Mr. Daly's company last Winter I told him the story.

"'Were you that girl?' he said. 'I was that office boy.'"

THOMAS DIXON has an antipathy for the noises and distractions of city life only equaled by his fondness for the silent places. Recently describing the beauties of rural Virginia, he recounted the following incident as illustrating the quiet habits of his neighbors on the Virginia coast. A couple of them on a hunting expedition were camping together, but rarely exchanged a word. One evening, while sitting around the camp fire, one of the natives abruptly ventured that a flock of ducks was passing overhead.

I WAS sitting in the observation car of Senator Depew," is the way the up-State politician tells it, "when the Senator was on his way to make several speeches in the northern tier of counties. I had asked the Senator if he was ever at a loss for a story.

"'I keep a good supply on hand,' he replied; 'but I sometimes make a story on the spur of the moment, to clinch an argument. However,' he added, in a reflective mood, 'I sometimes think that it is a detriment to a public speaker to have a reputation as a story teller. I remember that I was called upon once in my public career to act as honorary pallbearer. The funeral occurred in one of the interior towns right in this section through which we are traveling. JOHN ALVIN YOUNG of the Windsor Trust Company was watching a man lifting packages of shingles to the roof of a new building. The laborer hauled away at a rope that ran over a pulley fixed to the roof, and the load was almost heavier than himself. He stopped to light his pipe, wrapping his leg around the rope to hold the load in midair, but the weight was too great and he was jerked into the air. The load of shingles struck on edge, burst open, and made a cushion on to which he fell with a hollow thump. Another man craned his neck out of one of the empty window frames. "Are yes hurted, Mike?" he called. "Aw, poke yer head in," cried the unfortunate wrathfully. "Here I passed yes twice jist now, an' niver a word did yes say to me!"

ROBERT CLARKE the artist tells this story:

One day while out walking with a friend of his, this friend complained of toothache and asked where there was a dentist's office. They were in front of a drug store.

"Why," said Mr. Clarke, "the last time I had a toothache I went home and my wife kissed it away for me." After a moment's pause his friend said: "Is your wife home now?"

APHASIA is a curious thing and is no respecter of persons," said Dr. William J. Morton, in commenting on the number of absentminded persons suffering from the strain and stress of modern life. "Frequently it has a tragic ending, but a case in which the comic was strongly blended came to my attention a few days ago," he continued.

"The victim, in this instance, was subsequently identified as an up-State merchant who had come to New York and had completely forgotten his name and address. I saw him a few minutes after he arrived, by a roundabout way, at a private sanitarium. He was cheerful, even humorous, in his predicament, so humorous, in fact, that when asked his name he searched through his pockets and produced an expansive roll of bills, but nothing to identify himself.

"'Doctor,' he at length said, 'I've completely forgotten my name and where I live, but, by jimminy, I must be somebody somewhere to be carrying as much money as this around.'"

MOST of his American admirers knew the late Guy Boothby only as a teller of thrilling stories, but that there was another and a very different side to the man appears from a story which a London journalist, now in Australia, told the other day. He had been sent down to interview the novelist, and found him [illegible] him questions of distinctly literary flavor—all of which seemed to bore the host considerably. At last came this one:

"Mr. Boothby, what is your opinion of all this talk about art for art's sake? Especially, you know, as it would apply to a man like yourself, who writes for an immense audience which asks only to be amused?"

The other looked puzzled. He repeated the first query slowly and half aloud. Then he reached for the cigars and said:

"I'm afraid I've not got quite the hang of what you're after. You're quite right, no doubt. Yes, I'm sure you are. But come along down to my kennels and I'll show you a dog or two well worth your looking at."

Jefferson leaned slouchingly against the counter, shaking his head sadly, his wonderful blue eyes twinkling: "If my dog Schneider was here, he'd know me," he said, in his inimitable way. He didn't need his dog Schneider after that, the big office was full of any number of people willing to identify

The fact that the deposits of this Company under the new management have increased $750,000 since March 1st is evidence that its policy and methods are supplying in some degree a public want. We are building on the foundations of conservatism, Progression, Courtesy and Reciprocity.

This Company maintains a reserve on its demand deposits in the same amount as the Banks of this State, and engages in no underwritings.

Small accounts with possibilities of growth are invited, and receive the same care and attention as is extended to large ones.

CHEERS FOR ROOSEVELT AS HE WALKS TO CHURCH

Speech to Coloradans Who Flock to Hotel to See Him.

FAREWELL DINNER TO GUIDES

President's Party Boards Train for Night and Starts Home To-day —Sees His Trophies.

GLENWOOD SPRINGS, Col., May 7.—President Roosevelt to-night entertained at dinner his companions on his three weeks' hunt in the Rocky Mountains. After the dinner the President bade them farewell and promised that all would live forever in his fondest memory. At the dinner were P. E. Stewart of Colorado Springs, Dr. Alexander Lambert of New York, Guides Jacob Borah, John Goff, "Brick" Wells, John Fry, and G. M. Sprague, Elmer Chapman, courier, and Secretary Loeb. Chapman said:

"We sat just as we did in camp. Mr. Loeb was the only dude at the party. You reporter fellows ought to have been there. You could have got all kinds of pieces for your papers."

The President was at his best. He was entirely rested and had just come in from two or three hours' drive through the woods, where he went to study Colorado birds. Mr. Stewart is a naturalist, who knows every bird in the mountains and can tell its habits and imitate its calls.

The dinner was served in a private dining room at the Hotel Colorado. Flannel shirts were the rule, although the guides discarded their chapajeros and laid away revolvers. The President and Mr. Loeb wore frock suits and Dr. Lambert and Mr. Stewart were in business clothes.

Three weeks ago the railroads planned to run excursions into Glenwood Springs to-day, but the plan was discouraged by Secretary Loeb, who announced that no programme would be permitted which called for an address by the President. In spite of that fact, large numbers of persons arrived on every train. Rather than disappoint them, Mr. Roosevelt stepped out on the second floor balcony of the hotel after luncheon and spoke briefly, as follows:

"I did not expect the pleasure of meeting you to-day, and, as it is Sunday, I am not going to try to make a speech to you. I shall merely say how greatly I am enjoying my visit to this beautiful State. I wish that in the last week up in the mountains there had been a little more weather like this.

BETTER WEATHER, MORE BEARS.

"If there had been I think we would have about two bears better. But still, as we got ten, I do not think we have any right to complain. I am sure I need not tell you how much I have enjoyed my holiday here.

"It is a great pleasure to see the men of Colorado, and an even greater pleasure to see the women, and I do not know but what I am even more glad to see the small folks. I shall not try to make you a speech. I shall simply say again how glad I am to see you and be your guest."

The President's party was up early to-day. After breakfast a limited amount of mail was attended to. Then the President and comrades went to the Presbyterian church. An invitation was extended yesterday by the Rev. J. Wilson Curran and was accepted.

Just as the party was about to leave the hotel photographers requested a sitting that would include every member of the party. Chairs were grouped on the lawn in front of the veranda. As soon as it was over the President led off at a brisk walk, which brought the party to the little church in ten minutes, all out of breath except Mr. Roosevelt.

Along the street he was cheered and responded by lifting his hat frequently, patting children on the head, and bowing to parents.

SUNDAY SCHOOL'S GREETING.

In front of the church the Sunday school children stood in open formation, and as the party passed through the little folks sang. The church was crowded, and hundreds stood outside near the open windows. Mr. Curren preached on the responsibility of the Christian Church. He made no reference to the visitors except in his prayer, when he asked that strength be given to the President to carry on the duties of his office. The congregation remained standing as the Presidential party left the church.

Mr. Roosevelt set a rapid pace toward the hotel. Half way back he expressed a desire to see the skins of the bears he had shot, and turned to the store of Frank Hayes, a taxidermist, who has been mounting them. As the skins were laid out the President pointed to that of the first bear he had killed. He said that was his favorite, as it was the only one that had required more than ordinary sportsmanship to kill. Two shots were necessary. The pelt is the largest of the lot.

As the pelts were laid on the floor Mr. Roosevelt showed how each animal was hit. The taxidermist remarked that every shot had been clean and not a skin had been injured. After examining the skins and instructing that they be mounted with closed mouths instead of open-jawed, the President examined the skulls which are to be sent to Washington to be added to the collection of C. Hart Merriam, biologist of the Department of Agriculture. The taxidermist exhibited a cast showing the footprints of the first bear killed.

"I should like a duplicate of that," said the President.

"The original is yours if you will accept it," replied Mr. Hayes.

"That would make a good receiver for the cards of your Democratic Senators," said Mr. Stewart.

About 9:30 o'clock the President went to the private car Rocket, in which he will travel to Washington. The Presidential special train will leave Glenwood Springs at 5 o'clock to-morrow morning. A daylight run will be made to Denver in order

ROCKEFELLER STILL ILL.

Will Not Be Able to Lead Bible Class Next Sunday.

Although it is expected that John D. Rockefeller, Jr., will arrive in New York either to-day or to-morrow, he will not be the leader at next Sunday's session of his Bible class. He will probably attend, though. The Superintendent announced yesterday morning that Gen. O. O. Howard would speak Sunday.

"It may surprise some of you," the Superintendent said, "that our leader, Mr. Rockefeller, is not to take charge of the class and speak at our next meeting. But he is not well enough. His complaint, whatever it is, has not been cured by his trip abroad, and he will not be able to lead us next Sunday, though it is certain that he will be here before that time. Therefore Gen. O. O. Howard, who is an honorary member of our class, will speak to us."

There is a general atmosphere of expectancy among the members of the class. They are all anxious to greet Mr. Rockefeller again and hear him talk. Some of them, it is said, may meet him at the pier. After the meeting was over yesterday and the members of the class had a chance to converse, the leader's approaching return was the chief topic of their conversation.

The quartet which was discharged is still out, and there is no probability of its being again employed. Now the class, instead of hearing the quartet, listens to soloists.

The Rev. Howard Agnew Johnson, pastor of the Madison Avenue Presbyterian Church, was the speaker yesterday.

C. W. DICKEL DIES FROM FALL.

Proprietor of Riding Academy Was Thrown from Carriage.

Special to The New York Times.

WHITE PLAINS, N. Y., May 7.—Charles W. Dickel, founder of Dickel's Riding Academy, died at his country home, The Pines, last night as the result of an accident.

A week ago Mr. Dickel with his son Albert was out driving behind a pair of spirited horses. An automobile frightened the horses, and Mr. Dickel and his son were thrown out. Mr. Dickel's hip was broken and he was injured internally. His son escaped with a broken arm and bruises. The older man never recovered from the shock.

Mr. Dickel was fifty-six years old and well known in New York City, where he had among his patrons the Astors, Vanderbilts, Goulds, and Rockefellers. His wife died several years ago. He leaves four children, Charles, Albert, Bertha, and Gladys.

1,000 IMMIGRANTS AN HOUR.

12,039 Foreigners Passed Quarantine Yesterday, Breaking All Records.

All records were broken yesterday in the number of immigrants to pass Quarantine. Within twelve hours 12,039 foreigners, arriving in steerage, were permitted to enter New York, indicating that the Spring influx of immigrants this year will probably greatly exceed the record for former years.

Ten transatlantic liners brought this army of immigrants to the United States. They began to arrive early in the morning, and the last to pass Quarantine was the Hamburg-American liner Bluecher, which was admitted at 6 P. M., and which added 905 names to the already long list of foreigners arriving in the steerage.

The steamer Pretoria brought 2,198 steerage passengers. The Italia was second with 1,854, and the Welmar third with 1,571. The other ships admitted were the Citta di Napoli, which brought 1,442; Gerty, 1,410; Umbria, 640; New York, 586; the new French liner Hudson, 653, and the Algeria, 1,081.

STOWAWAYS SWIM ASHORE.

Leap from Italian Liner as It Nears Its Pier.

Just as the Italian liner Citta di Napoli, in yesterday afternoon from the Mediterranean, was about to be docked at the Italian piers at the foot of Thirty-fourth Street, in the North River, two young men leaped to the port railing of the liner and jumped into the water. Both were expert swimmers, and in less than ten minutes they had reached the shore and scampered away, whither no one knows. Nicola Ferro and Stephano Gracaloni are the names of the persons who landed so unceremoniously, and both were stowaways. Unless they are captured, the United States Government will impose a fine of $1,000 on the line for permitting their escape, whether willingly or unwillingly.

Both Stephano and Nicola are little more than boys, and, according to a third stowaway, they had the reputation of being the most expert swimmers and divers in Naples. For a long time the two boys, with the third stowaway—who did not escape—had read of the wonders of the great country beyond the Atlantic, and they determined to see it. Accordingly, on the morning of April 21 the three boys mingled with the thousand steerage passengers on the dock, and when the gangplank of the Citta di Napoli was lowered managed to get on board without being noticed. They found a convenient hiding place in the hold, where they remained until the liner passed Gibraltar. Then they walked on deck and admitted to the first officer they met that they were deadhead passengers.

All three immediately were put to work in the stoke hole, and for the rest of the voyage they worked as never they worked before.

The skipper of the Citta di Napoli, Capt. Lavadello, lost no time in giving an alarm, and the police were soon hunting for the stowaways. Late last night the search had proved in vain, and one of the policemen, in the hunt, declared that he believed the earth had swallowed them

JOHN A. RUTHERFURD WEDS MRS. CORA DAVIS

Ceremony Performed Saturday at Atlantic City.

BRIDE SIX MONTHS A WIDOW

Bridegroom Is a Member of the Stock Exchange and Belongs to Many Clubs—Married by Brother.

The marriage of John Alexander Rutherfurd to Mrs. Cora Baker Davis, widow of Henry S. F. Davis, was announced yesterday. The ceremony was performed on Saturday in the Church of the Ascension in Atlantic City. The officiating clergyman was the Rev. William Walton Rutherfurd of this city, a brother of the bridegroom.

Mr. and Mrs. Rutherfurd will arrive in this city to-day. They will go to the home of the bride at 355 Riverside Avenue, where they will remain for a few days. They will spend their honeymoon on Mr. Rutherfurd's yacht, which is now fitting out, and on the return from their yachting trip, about July 1, will go abroad. They are booked to sail on July 19. Mr. Rutherfurd and his bride have known each other for years.

Mr. Rutherfurd is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Walter Rutherfurd of 46 East Sixty-fourth Street, both of whom are dead. While Mrs. Rutherfurd was alive and entertained at the Rutherfurd home Mrs. Davis and her husband were frequent guests at dinners, and the Rutherfurds were often guests at the house of Mr. and Mrs. Davis.

Mrs. Rutherfurd had been a widow for a little more than six months. Her husband left her a considerable estate. The Davises were among the earliest settlers in the once fashionable neighborhood about Fourteenth Street and Fifth Avenue, and the march of business has not yet succeeded in crowding out the fine old Davis homestead on the up-town side of Fourteenth Street, between Fifth and Sixth Avenues, where the late H. S. F. Davis was born and where his father died.

While across the street department stores beckoned with their bargains, a brindle cow up to quite recently could be seen grazing peacefully on the spacious lawns in the garden surrounding the old homestead far back from the street.

Both Mr. and Mrs. Rutherfurd are socially prominent. The Rutherfurds, who originally came from New Jersey, where the family owns much land, were prominent even in Colonial days.

Mr. Rutherfurd is a member of the Stock Exchange. He is in business at 20 Broad Street with his brother, Walter Rutherfurd of 714 Madison Avenue. A first cousin of the groom is Rutherfurd Stuyvesant, who owns the fine estate, Tranquillity, in New Jersey, where he has a great deer park covering hundreds of acres. The estate is one of the oldest in the country, and existed in Washington's time.

Mr. Rutherfurd is a member of many clubs, among them the Metropolitan, the Larchmont Yacht Club, the Manhattan Club, the Adirondacks League, the New York Yacht Club, the Liederkranz Society, the Society of the Cincinnati, and the Sons of the Revolution.

The Liberty and Reading Hose Company reached the fire in ample time to put out the blaze, but got into a squabble over possession of a water plug. For twenty minutes the trouble went on, while the flames gained.

A second and third alarm brought two reserve companies and a wagon load of police. The reserves put out the fire while the police clubbed the fighting firemen.

COLLISION ON ELEVATED.

Third Avenue Trains Crash at Uptown Station—Six Slightly Hurt.

Six passengers were slightly hurt in a collision between two south-bound Third Avenue elevated railroad trains yesterday forenoon at the One Hundred and Thirty-third Street station. The first train had stopped just south of the station, being held up by the opening of the drawbridge over the Harlem River, when the second train crashed into it. The motorman of the second train says his brakes did not work.

Those hurt were all in the second train. The passengers in that train who intended to get out at the station had arisen from their seats, and were standing in the aisles and on the platforms expecting the gates to open in a moment. The shock threw them in heaps on the floors of the cars, and a rush for the gates followed. It was by this rush that the injuries were caused. Those hurt were:

Jacob Kadchin, twenty-eight years old, 10 Euclid Avenue, New Rochelle, contusions of scalp; Mary Delmonco, twenty-eight, 217 East One Hundred and Eighth Street, shock; Max Abelman, nineteen, 1,823 Clay Avenue, fingers cut by broken glass; Morris Rosen, fifty-two, 860 East One Hundred and Forty-first Street, shock; Herman Schwartz, sixty-one, 1,762 Madison Avenue, contusions of forearm; Conrad Jaeger, seventy-two, 439 East Eighty-fourth Street, shock.

POLICE TORN TO PIECES.

Russian Mob's Terrible Revenge for the Death of a Workman.

ST. PETERSBURG, May 7.—In revenge for the death of a workman, who was drowned in attempting to escape from a patrol, a mob of workmen at Ekaterinburg, tore to pieces two police officers. Order there has been restored.

The police officials investigating the attempt to assassinate the Governor of Viborg received by express a package of papers and clothes, with a letter stating that they would throw light on the crime.

The package contained an infernal machine charged with dynamite enough to destroy a building, but the mechanism failed to operate.

The employes of all the railways of Russia have formed a league for the defense of their interests.

MUSIC LEADS TO TRAGEDY.

Unwelcome Serenade Has a Fatal Ending in Williamsburg.

Peter Novelin, fifty-six years old, of 31 Meeker Avenue, Williamsburg, early yesterday morning shot and fatally wounded Patrick Ketchma, forty years old, living in an adjoining house at 29 Meeker Avenue.

The shooting took place on the sidewalk at 31 Meeker Avenue.

Four weeks ago Ketchma entertained some friends with music. Novelin[illegible] his disapproval, going [illegible] Ketchma. Saturday night Ketchma, with his friends, serenaded Novelino, who armed himself and went down stairs, accompanied by his sixteen-year-old daughter.

On the front stoop stood Ketchma, who refused to move. Novelino opened fire and sent a bullet through his heart. Some of the serenaders also drew revolvers and shot at Novelino and his daughter, but fruitlessly.

Novelino was locked up, charged with murder. There were also arrested of the serenaders Salvato Lugano, forty-three years old, of 31 Manhattan Avenue, charged with shooting at Novelino's daughter, and Nicolo Lonono, forty-three years old, of 29 Meeker Avenue, charged with carrying a loaded revolver. All were arraigned in the Manhattan Avenue Court before Magistrate Meade, where Novelino was held without bail, Lugano in $2,000 bail, and Lonono was held for trial at Special Sessions.

SERGEANT SAVED FOUR MEN.

Handicapped by Beefsteak Dinner, Sharkey Swam to Rescue.

Police Sergeant Louis Sharkey of the Ralph Avenue Police Station was counted a hero by his comrades yesterday. Notwithstanding the fact that he had dined heartily at a Rockaway Beach beefsteak outing, he gallantly rescued four men from the capsized catboat Argus in Jamaica Bay.

It was his day off, and with four friends he was returning from the dinner in his naphtha launch. They were speeding through a choppy sea off the Belle Harbor Yacht Club, when they saw the Argus capsize.

Sharkey steered for the craft. Four men were clinging to her keel, unable to swim. Sharkey jumped overboard and brought to his launch one man after the other. They proved to be Dr. Rudolph Reese, Dr. William Rethfelder, William O. Arnold, and another man who did not give his name, but who asserted that all were from Brooklyn.

The rescued, the rescuer, and his friends landed at the Jamaica Bay Yacht Club, where restoratives were served.

ARMY OFFICER DROWNED.

Lieut. Ross Thrown Into Fort Monroe Moat During Early Morning Ride.

Special to The New York Times.

NEWPORT NEWS, Va., May 7.—First Lieut. Moses R. Ross was drowned in the moat at Fort Monroe early to-day as a result of a peculiar accident.

It seems that Lieut. Ross at 2 o'clock in the morning was riding a bicycle along the cement walkway skirting the moat, which lies between the old water battery and the inner wall of the fort, when the bicycle chain snapped, and he was precipitated into the water. It is presumed that he was stunned by the fall.

Lieut. Ross was a native of Pennsylvania. He came into the regular army through the volunteer force which saw duty in the Spanish war, being transferred from the Fifth Pennsylvania to the Forty-sixth United States Infantry. He entered the Artillery Corps in 1901 and received his commission as First Lieutenant Nov. 13, 1903.

JOY LINE STEAMER SUNK IN COLLISION

Aransas Hits Barge Off Pollock's Rip—Woman Passenger Lost.

BOATS MANNED PROMPTLY

Steamer Was Bound from Boston to New York—Crash Occurred in a Fog.

VINEYARD HAVEN, Mass., May 7.—The steamer Aransas, Capt. Rood, of the Joy Line was sunk in collision with the barge Glendower one and a half miles southeast of Pollock Rip Lightship to-night.

One woman passenger is reported lost.

The survivors reached this port in the lifeboats of the steamer. The Glendower was in tow of the Reading Railroad tug bound east from Philadelphia. The Aransas sank almost immediately after the collision, but it is said that the tow kept on. Sixty-five passengers have been landed here.

The Aransas sailed from Boston yesterday, bound for New York.

Early arrivals in the steamer's boats could give no idea of the cause of the collision. It is believed here that it was due to fog, as there has been much thick weather off the coast the past few days.

The survivors state that when the crash came the boats were promptly manned and the suddenly awakened passengers were hurried into the boats almost before they realized that an accident had occurred. All went over the side of the sinking craft without injury with the exception of the one woman passenger who went down with the steamer.

There was no wind at the time, and the pull for the shore was uneventful.

The barge Glendower was a converted schooner of 855 tons gross and 823 tons net, 192 feet long, 34 feet broad, and 16 feet deep. She was built at Noank, Conn., in 1894, carried a crew of three men, and was bound for Philadelphia loaded with coal for an Eastern port. The Glendower appeared from the Aransas to have been uninjured.

The Aransas formerly was owned by the Southern Pacific Railway Company. For many years she was employed in services out of New Orleans, running from that port to Havana and also between New York and New Orleans. She was an iron ship, with twin screws, and had four bulkheads.

The Aransas was an ocean passenger steamer, running between New York and Boston. She was of 1,156 gross and 678 net tonnage. Her length was 241 feet, breadth 35 feet, and depth 16 feet. She was built at Wilmington, Del., in 1878, and carried a crew of thirty-six men.

Indicted Man Tells of Projected Tobacco Corporation.

BEAUMONT, Texas, May 7.—Charles F. Taylor of Chicago, indicted for fraud at Nacogdoches, left for that place today to hold a conference regarding the reorganization of the Texas-Cuba Tobacco Company, which went out of business some months ago. He was accompanied by his attorney, George S. King.

According to King, Taylor will go from Nacogdoches to Chicago in response to a telegram received from Mrs. Alice Webb-Duke.

"After a further conference in Chicago," said Mr. King, "Taylor and Mrs. Alice Webb-Duke will go to Durham, N. C., the home of Brodie L. Duke, where plans have been made looking to the establishment of a tobacco company."

He showed dispatches purporting to be from Duke offering substantial assistance to Mrs. Duke.

AMBULANCE'S RECORD RUN.

Man Who Lost Leg Goes to Hospital in Rapid Time.

Charles Devlin, twenty-eight years old, of 304 West One Hundred and Twenty-ninth Street, while leaning on an elevated pillar at Eighth Avenue and One Hundred and Forty-first Street early yesterday morning, fell under a speeding car. His left leg was severed above the knee.

A call was sent to J. Hood Wright Hospital. Driven by Dominic Naughton, an ambulance, in charge of Dr. Severance and drawn by the horse Firefly, reached the injured man and returned with him to the hospital in eleven minutes, a record run. The distance covered was two and one-half miles.

Bystanders suggested that the suction caused by the rapidly moving car had Sloop Dismantled by Squall—Fishing Party Rescues Fifty.

BRIDGEPORT, Conn., May 7.—The sloop Christie, owned and sailed by Capt. Samuel Jack of Stratford, was caught in a squall this afternoon between the Bridgeport Lighthouse and Steeplechase Island. MORE RIOTERS CAUGHT.

Police Arrest Twenty-eight Boys on Third Avenue Elevated.

Warfare against the hoodlums who infest the Third Avenue elevated cars returning from Bronx Park on Sunday afternoons was continued yesterday, with the result that twenty-eight boys of ages ranging from twelve to eighteen years were locked up in the Morrisania. Alexander Avenue, and East One Hundred and Twenty-sixth Street Stations, and in the rooms of the Children's Society.

Four detectives of the railroad boarded the cars and spotted the troublemakers, and when the train reached the One Hundred and Sixty-first Street station the boys were taken in charge by police waiting there. The same process was continued at the other stations. This makes a total of 100 arrests which have been made during the past two weeks. The boys will be arraigned in the Morrisania Court this morning.

VANDERBILT SLEIGH BELLS.

W. K., Jr.'s, New Horses Must Have Them, Even In Summer.

When an express train was due to arrive at Great Neck, L. I., last Saturday morning, and there was the usual crush of fashionable equipages and automobiles with members of the Summer colony at the station, all were surprised to hear the jingle of sleigh bells. A trim station wagon drove up, and out of it stepped Mrs. William K. Vanderbilt, Jr. About the throat latch of each horse was a string of silver sleigh bells.

Inquiry revealed the fact that the team of horses attached to the Vanderbilt rig had just been imported from England and that they had been trained in an unusual manner. If the bells are not on the harness the horses become unmanageable.

RESCUE CREW ADRIFT IN ICE.

Nome Party It Went to Save Reaches Land in Safety.

Special to The New York Times.

TACOMA, Washington, May 7.—The gasolene craft Louise, sent from Nome last week to rescue a gasolene launch missing with four men, has been lost in an ice pack and carried north toward the Arctic Ocean. The rescue party left Nome a week ago, and were expected to return by Thursday night.

Signals are flashed nightly from searchlights in Nome and bonfires on the summit of of adjacent hills, but no answer has been received.

Bering Sea is free from ice in frone of Nome. It is feared that the rescue party has met the fate feared for the original party. The four who were castaways have arrived safely at Solomon, traveling afoot over pack ice.

POLICE SAVE MAN FROM MOB.

With great difficulty police in the Bronx last night saved the life of an Italian, who it is alleged tried to attack Loretta Ryan, fifteen years of age, at the gate to her home, 2,519 Washington Avenue.

FRANCE AN ENEMY, JAPANESE DECLARE

Papers Call on England to Fulfil Terms of Alliance.

KAMRANH AS A RUSSIAN BASE

Interned Captain Said to Have Supervised Coaling of Baltic Fleet While Jonquieres Looked On.

LONDON TIMES—NEW YORK TIMES. Special Cable. Copyright, 1905.

TOKIO, May 7.—Even when this country was on the verge of war with Russia the Japanese press did not show greater excitement and indignation than now. The most sober journals declare that France has virtually taken up arms against Japan.

References to the Anglo-Japanese alliance are assuming a tone of marked impatience. It is plainly stated that it is England's duty to prevent interference by third parties equally in the interests of her ally and for the world's peace.

The newspapers challenge France to abandon her double-faced dealing as unworthy of a great power, and to declare frankly for Russia.

They say that, whereas the French Nation was recently revered as the incarnation of liberty and sincerity, it has now incurred deep discredit for its breach of faith. They question whether France has fully counted the cost of earning the enmity of the newly risen Oriental State, and declare that she has created a situation of the gravest nature, since it is conclusively proved that she has connived flagrantly at gross violations of her neutrality, to the great injury of Japan's vital interests.

The United Chambers of Commerce of Japan are concerting measures to cease all commercial transactions with French citizens.

CALLS SITUATION GRAVE.

London Times Urges France to Harbor No Illusions.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES. [Copyright, 1905.]

LONDON, Monday, May 8.—The Times takes a very serious view of the situation created by the proceedings of the Russian Baltic Fleet in Indo-Chinese waters. In an editorial article today it says:

"In the interests of the peace of the world we earnestly trust that the Government and people of France do not remain under any illusion in regard to the great gravity of the situation which has arisen from the alleged conduct of the Baltic Fleet off the coast of Indo-China.

"The correspondent of a news agency sends from Hongkong a long telegram which the French authorities at Saigon refused to transmit a few days ago. In this telegram he gives, apparently as an eye witness, a full account of the operations conducted in French waters for the reprovisioning of the Baltic Fleet, and conducted, not only with the knowledge and in the presence of the French Admiral, but under the supervision of Prince Lieven, Captain of the Russian cruiser Diana, which took refuge at Saigon after the disastrous naval sortie from Port Arthur last Aug. 10 and has been interned there ever since.

"Of the serious nature of these facts, if they are accurately stated, there can be no two opinions."

England's Duty to Act.

After quoting from the message of its Tokio correspondent setting forth the feeling in Japan as a result of the treatment the French have accorded to Admiral Rojestvensky and the arguments advanced in Tokio in favor of appealing to the Anglo-Japanese alliance in order to secure redress, The Times says the British people cannot affect to treat with indifference the assertions of the Japanese press. It is the duty of England to prevent the interference of third parties in the Russo-Japanese war.

The Times warns France that it would be a deplorable error to treat the complaint of the Japanese with a light heart. It says the French will understand that any action England may take is inspired by the strongest wish to avert the possibility of an incident which might dissolve the entente between England and France and compel the two countries to take opposite sides in a great international controversy.

An intimation follows that Lord Lansdowne has already spoken very strongly to France about the alleged breaches of neutrality in Indo-Chinese must remember that we should have no choice but to comply. Nothing would gratify her enemies more. Nothing would bring grief more profound to the vast majority of both peoples."

LONDON, Monday, May 8.—The latest dispatches from the Far East in regard to the operations of the Russian Baltic Fleet in Kamranh Bay and other ports of French Indo-China are of an alarming character.

Their publication in the morning papers to-day is sure to result in wide adherence to the suggestion presented in my telegram of Friday that there may be work close at hand for the British China Fleet in connection with the neutrality question between France and Japan.

By The Associated Press.

LONDON, Monday, May 8.—A telegram from Hongkong to a news agency gives a long dispatch which, it is alleged, the French authorities at Saigon refused to transmit on April 30, detailing how for ten days the Russian Pacific Squadron was allowed to turn Kamranh Bay practically into a Russian base.

The vessels, it is stated, were coaled and provisioned openly under the direction of Prince Lieven, Captain of the interned Russian cruiser Diana. The French Admiral de Jonquières was present the whole time and, until April 23, made no attempt to check the breach of neutrality.

Dispatches from Tokio to the London morning newspapers state that Japanese feeling is becoming highly inflamed. The Tokio Asahi bluntly describes the assurances of the French that they would preserve neutrality as falsehoods, declares that Japan would be justified in bombarding French territory, and calls upon the Government to take vigorous action.

Among Japanese officials in London it is asserted that France put off Japan by fair promises in order to give Rojestvensky time to effect a junction with Nebogatoff's division.

It is further asserted that every privilege is now given to the Russians provided they keep just outside the three-mile limit.

The report from Tsing-Tau that the Russian squadron is off Vanfong, which is an inlet containing the port of Honkohe, the Three Kings being rocks near the entrance of Vanfong Bay, is regarded as confirming the Japanese assertion that Rojestvensky is still cruising in French waters.

The Daily Telegraph correspondent at Tokio says that in response to Japan's second protest France intimated that Rojestvensky had been ordered to leave Honkohe.

BIG FLEET NEAR BORNEO.

Seen Friday Night—Was in Two Divisions and Apparently Coaling.

LONDON, Monday, May 8.—A dispatch to The Daily Mail, dated Labuan, British Borneo, May 6, says:

"The steamer Shiengmai reports that on Friday night she passed a fleet of warships and other vessels off the Mantanani Islands, northwest of Borneo. The warships apparently were coaling."

A dispatch from Labuan to Reuter's Telegram Company reports that the fleet sighted was a large one in two divisions, showing lights, but stationary, and with the appearance of being engaged in coaling.

TOKIO, May 7.—Assuming that Admiral Rojestvensky meditates a speedy junction of his squadron with Admiral Nebogatoff's division, it is believed here that the meeting of the ships may be expected by next Tuesday, the speed of Nebogatoff's division being only about 7 knots an hour.

Nebogatoff's ships are believed to be in need of coal and stores, and their deficiencies in this respect will probably be supplied by Rojestvensky at some friendly port after the two Admirals effect a junction.

The future movements of the Russian Pacific Squadron are a matter of speculation here, although the delay of Rojestvensky on the Indo-Chinese coast has raised doubt as to whether he purposes to move northward and risk an engagement at an early date.

The Vladivostok destroyers have not again been reported, and it is believed they have returned to Vladivostok.

JAPANESE ARMY ADVANCING.

Oyama's Force Now Said to Total 390,000 Men.

GADGEYADANA, Manchuria, May 7.—Since April 29 the Japanese have been advancing slowly and intermittently, pushing forward their columns successively from right to left under cover of a screen of cavalry and Chinese bandits. The advance has resulted in straightening the alignment of the opposing armies, Russian detachments which were far advanced on the flanks being forced to retire.

Erdagou, to the eastward, was occupied May 5, but under pressure by the Russians the Japanese later evacuated the place. On the left the Russian cavalry retired behind the Liao River, the Japanese occupying Palatun, Sanlingan, and Batzya. The village of Shahedzi, on the railroad north of Changtufu, has been occupied and burned by the Japanese. There was a sharp brush with Chinese bandits on the extreme Russian right to-day.

It is reported that the Japanese armies in the centre have recently been reinforced. The force at Field Marshal Oyama's disposal, according to information recently received, is 348 battalions, or 390,000 men.

The Japanese are said to have armed 25,000 or 30,000 Chinese bandits with captured Russian rifles. The Chinese population has been drafted by the Japanese for roadmaking and intrenching, and roads are being constructed to Sinminpu, Banchentze, and Nanga Pass.

RUSSIA'S HOPES OF NIXON.

American Shipbuilder's Torpedo Boats Nearly Completed.

SEVASTOPOL, May 7.—The torpedo boats which are being built at the Government yard here under the general supervision of Lewis Nixon of New York are nearing completion, and their trials in the Black Sea will begin in a few days. In order to overcome the difficulty always encountered in work in a foreign country, Mr. Nixon provided his own organization, with which he has pushed the construction of these boats.

The Russian Admiralty already has had practical evidence of the seaworthiness of the Nixon boats in the performance of the Gregory, which crossed the Atlantic in the face of heavy weather, but the future prestige of the designer of the American battleship Oregon will depend in Russia upon the result of the coming trials, which will be much more severe than usual in order to test certain advantages claimed for them by their American constructor.

POLICY HOLDERS OWN SURPLUS---ALEXANDER

Profits Theirs, Writes Equitable's President.

SAYS HE WILL NOT RESIGN

Asserts That "Proprietary Regime" Must Succumb—Thinks Policy Holders Should Elect All Directors.

A letter from President Alexander of the Equitable Life to Edward A. Woods, manager of the society's business in Pittsburg, was made public yesterday, and in it Mr. Alexander says that the surplus of the society is held entirely for the benefit of the policy holders. Mr. Alexander says also that he will devote all his efforts to the principle of mutualization, and that he will not resign. The letter, which bears the date of May 6, is as follows:

"I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your pamphlet containing extracts from official statements by the society as to the mutual plan of its business, and the exclusive ownership by the policy holders of its surplus. I also note your request that, as President of the society, I confirm substantially the statements it contains.

"I recognize that, for the benefit of present and future policy holders of the society, there should be at this time some clear and unequivocal expression on this subject, and, without reviewing all the society's statements on this subject, I consider that there can be no doubt as to three facts: First, that the business of the society has been conducted in accordance with its charter, since the date of its organization, on the mutual plan; second, that the profits of the society have been accumulated for its policy holders, and, third, that the surplus of the society is held for the exclusive benefit of its policy holders.

"I do not recall any serious question having ever arisen on these points until recently, when a claim has been put forward on behalf of the stock which is at variance with the terms of the society's charter, the uniform course of its business, and all its official and unofficial statements and representations. This is not merely my own understanding and opinion, but is confirmed by Mr. Van Cise, who, as you know, has been in the service of the society for nearly forty years, most of the time as its actuary. No one connected with the Equitable needs to be told of the great authority and distinction which Mr. Van Cise has won as a life insurance actuary. His official position in the society is one of complete independence, and on every subject pertaining to the society's business which is of a scientific or mathematical character he is regarded as an unreviewable authority.

"I quote a letter written by Mr. Van Cise to Mr. F. A. McNamee, the society's manager at Albany, N. Y., in response to formal inquiries from the latter on the subject of the surplus. I understand these inquiries were made pursuant to resolutions adopted at a recent meeting of an organization of the society's managers and agents. Mr. Van Cise's letter is as follows:

May 5, 1905.

F. A. McNamee, Permanent Secretary, Albany, N. Y.

Dear Sir: Your communication of the 1st inst., with copy of preamble and resolutions inclosed, was duly received and contents carefully noted.

As an officer of the Equitable Life Assurance Society I fully agree with you as to the truth of the following statements in regard to the Equitable:

"First—That the business has always been and must always be conducted on the mutual plan.

"Second—That the entire surplus belongs to the policy holders exclusively.

"Third—That each participating policy will receive its due share of surplus profits in accordance with the terms of each contract, respectively.

"Fourth—That the agents in soliciting business on this basis have acted with due authority.

"Fifth—That the policy holders have no ground for apprehension or doubt in the premises."

In this connection I would say that while I have been connected with the Equitable, as clerk and officer, for nearly thirty-eight years, I have never, until recently, heard of any questions being raised as to the absolute ownership of the surplus of the society by its policy holders.

For about thirty years I had the privilege of being associated as one of the subordinate officers with Henry B. Hyde, the founder and late President of the society, and my recollection is that in his declarations, both verbal and in writing, he always stated that the business of the Equitable was transacted on the mutual plan, and that the stockholders could not receive more than the dividend of $7,000 per annum on their capital stock, which was provided for by the charter.

Mr. Hyde always directed me to apportion surplus to policy holders, when entitled by their contracts to such apportionment, on the basis of its all belonging to policy holders, and he was very much averse to any reduction of dividends, unless such reduction was found to be absolutely necessary in accordance with our experience.

As Actuary and Assistant Actuary of the society, I have had special charge during more than twenty-five years of the apportionment of surplus to holders of deferred dividend contracts at the end of their dividend periods, and, in making such apportionments, I have always proceeded upon the assumption that the entire surplus of the society belonged to its policy holders.

Trusting that you will find this information both complete and satisfactory, I remain, yours very truly, J. G. VAN CISE, Actuary.

"These statements are literally true. They should set at rest all doubts and quiet an agitation which should never have arisen and is naturally disturbing to the society's policy holders and agents.

"No greater emphasis could be given to the fact that the Equitable Life Assurance Society is really a mutual life insurance company, in which the interests and rights of the policy holders are recognized as paramount, than the success of the recent effort to confer upon the policy holders the right of electing a majority of the society's Directors. The amended charter, designed to carry into effect this reform, was adopted by a unanimous vote of the Board of Directors, and, although its operation is temporarily arrested through litigation, I am convinced that the action of the board will be upheld by the courts.

"Thus the policy holders will exercise a controlling influence in the management of the society. This is as it should be. While my personal view from the beginning has been that it would have been wiser and more beneficial in every sense to the society to have the entire Board of Directors elected by the policy holders, it is a source of gratification to have secured so substantial a recognition of the principle of mutualization as is involved in the election by the policy holders of a majority of the board.

"It will follow that the personal proprietary régime within the society must succumb to the checks and restraints necessarily involved in this passage of control to the policy holders, and many of the abuses and irregularities which are now in course of elimination cannot thereafter recur. It should be a source of confidence to every one interested in the society that the correction of all conditions hurtful in tendency or effect is being accomplished within the society itself.

"Notwithstanding the present publicity and wide discussion of the society's affairs, I regard the situation as full of encouragement for all who are truly interested in the society and its prosperity. The financial strength and stability of the society are not questioned. There is no abatement of effort on the part of its efficient staff and loyal agency force to perform their full duty to the society in maintaining and extending its growth and prestige. The work we have inaugurated will be carried to a successful completion.

"In this determination there is but one thought, either on the part of the independent members of the Board of Directors, the society's officers, or of the agents. I shall devote myself and all my strength to its accomplishment.

"Do not be deceived by rumored suggestions of my resignation as President of the society. They proceed from interested sources and are intended to discredit and the principle of mutualization. At-

DIDN'T MEAN TO SHOOT BOY.

Policeman Says He Drew Pistol to Frighten Gang.

Policeman Thomas J. Maloney, who shot nine-year-old John Smith in the thigh at West End Avenue and Sixtieth Street Saturday night, said yesterday that he had drawn the pistol only to frighten off a gang, which was plundering freight cars. Members of the gang were throwing stones at him he said.

Maloney did not take part in the police parade Saturday. Because he was one of those who remained on duty he had four or five times as much ground to cover as usual. When night came, he says, he was so tired and hungry he could hardly stand.

When he came to the corner of Sixtieth Street and West End Avenue he saw a gang of about fifty boys and young men clambering over freight cars. The few watchmen were helpless.

"When I tried to scatter them," said Maloney, yesterday, "they threw stones at me. I suppose I was out of patience, but I didn't want to shoot any of them. I pulled out my pistol and pointed it at the crowd, just to scare them away. I didn't even know when it went off."

The yardmaster, whose office is in the yards just opposite Sixty-seventh Street, said the police have a hard time of it in the neighborhood.

"Nobody can know what they have to go up against," he said, "unless they know something of these toughs here. They robbed that car right over there last night, with four watchmen trying to keep the yards safe. The toughs let one another down over the wall with ropes. When the thief has stolen what he wants his pals pull him up again.

"They'd kill a policeman for five cents if they thought they wouldn't get caught. A cop without a gun along West End Avenue here wouldn't live through the night."

BOY KILLED BY AUTOMOBILE.

Chauffeur Takes Victim's Body to Police Station in Buffalo.

Special to The New York Times.

BUFFALO, N. Y., May 7.—While George Ulrich was driving a big touring car from Tonawanda to Buffalo early this evening the machine struck and killed William O'Rourke, the twelve-year-old son of Patrick O'Rourke, a coachman for Pascal P. Pratt.

Ulrich put the body of the boy in his machine and took it to the Pearl Street Police Station, after which the little victim's parents were notified.

Young O'Rourke, it appears, was riding a wheel and going in the same direction as the automobile. According to the story of Ulrich, the boy tried to cross in front of the machine. Ulrich turned at the same time, and the collision crushed the boy's skull.

WIRELESS WEATHER REPORTS

Government Plan to Utilize Chain of Telegraph Stations.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, May 7.—The Government wireless telegraph stations will shortly extend in a chain along the Atlantic Coast from Portland, Me., to Galveston, Texas.

It has been arranged by the Navy Department that all merchant ships fitted with wireless apparatus shall make daily weather reports when in touch with the Government stations which are now established between Portland and New Orleans.

All such reports will be forwarded to the Weather Bureau at Washington. It is also planned that there shall be special reports of any marked changes observed in the barometer at other times.

These naval wireless stations will furnish the ships when desired with weather forecasts which come from the Weather Bureau. At certain of the posts the usual weather signals will be displayed, those posts being selected from which the signals may be best observed by passing vessels.

Denver City Fathers to Abolish Landlords' Ban on Children.

Special to The New York Times.

DENVER, May 7.—The Board of Supervisors, apropos of President Roosevelt's visit, is about to attempt to get an ordinance through the City Council which will prevent the present discrimination on the part of landlords against tenants with children.

The ordinance, which its author says is favored by a majority of the board, will compel landlords of apartment houses to take tenants with children until it can be proved before proper authorities that the children are unruly and detrimental to the interests of other tenants. The President of the board has consulted with lawyers on the legal aspect of the proposition, and has been assured that it can be enforced

VACCINATION BY WHOLESALE.

Ordered for 1,800 Brooklyn Children Because of Smallpox Scare.

Sanitary Superintendent Thomas Fogarty of Brooklyn had all his available force of men out yesterday tracing those supposed to have come in contact in one way or another with the persons living in the boarding house at 283 State Street, where smallpox was discovered Saturday, two of the cases having proved fatal.

To-day a squad of men from the Health Department will visit Public School No. 15, at Third Avenue and State Street, and vaccinate all of the 1,800 pupils there. Cecil O'Donnell, who boarded at the State Street house, and who is now in the Hospital for Contagious Diseases on Kingston Avenue, dangerously ill with small pox, attended this school up to last Tuesday, when he became so ill he had to go home.

OPEN RING BEGINS TO-DAY AT BELMONT PARK

Metropolitan Association to Lose Its Control of Betting.

TALK OF FIGHT IN COURT

Suggestion Is Made That Layers May Join with Poolrooms in War on Tracks.

An "open ring," without recognition of the Metropolitan Turf Association, is promised when racing begins this afternoon at the Belmont Park race track, and men who are interested in turf betting are looking ahead with great curiosity to the developments that are expected in the fight begun by the Metropolitan Association in its effort to retain its old exclusive privileges. The announcement that the ring would be open, or, in other words, that the control of betting by the Metropolitan Association would end, and places in the ring would be open to all reputable applicants was made yesterday, and was of a semi-official character. It convinced the members of the Metropolitan Turf Association that the fight they provoked when at the Aqueduct track they made a demand for recognition from the racing authorities, will be a struggle for existence by their organization, and through the entire day the members discussed the situation and the wisdom of the move their officers have made in stirring up the controversy.

A meeting of the Metropolitan Association was set for yesterday afternoon in the rooms of the organization, in West Twenty-sixth Street, but, as a member stated last night, the meeting was declared off, and in its stead the leading bookmakers of the association held an informal conference. Just what they decided on they declined to make public, but it was said by individual members that there was a division of opinion. A number of the M. T. A. members urged that the association give up the fight, and if the offer still is open accept the terms proposed by the managers of the Belmont Park race course, requiring the Metropolitan Association to guarantee a "big ring" of eighty or more men through the racing season in New York, non-members of the association to fill in the vacant places when the Metropolitans failed to have the full quota on hand. The leaders in the movement that has caused the friction were determined to fight and test their strength, though it is generally agreed that the loss of the old exclusive control of the betting rings must mean the destruction of the Metropolitan Turf Association.

The Metropolitan Turf Association some years ago had a somewhat similar contest, and for a few days was barred from the race tracks, while another association, which, oddly enough, bore the same initials, being the Manhattan Turf Alliance, dominated the betting until the Metropolitan Association made terms and resumed control of the ring speculation.

It was said yesterday that the association would have a fund of $200,000 available for the litigation which its officers have hinted they will institute. It has been suggested that the Metropolitan Association may join forces with the lawyer who for the past four years has been attacking the race tracks in the interest of a client, a poolroom keeper, who sought revenge for interference with his business.

POLYGLOT ROW AT MEETING.

Warsaw Sympathizers Differ as to Tongue Used by Speakers.

About 500 men, women, and children, sympathizers with those who were wounded and the relatives of those who were killed in Warsaw on May 1, which they frequently alluded to as "Red Monday," met in the hall at 7 and 9 Second Avenue last night to protest against Russian oppression. Many of them were in mourning for those who fell on that day, and made their hatred for Russia plain by hissing every allusion to the soldiery of that country and its laws.

It looked squally several times because of the difference of opinion which was entertained as to the language the speakers should use. John Steig, who presided, after mentioning the fact that Isaac Isaacs was about to address them, asked the audience whether they preferred to be addressed in Russian or Polish.

In a moment a storm of cries mingled with hisses resounded through the hall, some shouting "Russian! Russian!" others "Polish! Polish!" In this instance order was restored only when the speaker promised to address the audience in both languages, which he did. In another instance, when the question arose whether the speaker should use Yiddish or Russian as a vehicle for his ideas, the matter had to be put to a vote, those who favored Yiddish winning.

A small admission fee was charged, and $150 was raised for the relatives of those killed in the Warsaw riots.

ARREST VAILSBURG CYCLISTS.

Police Prevent Attempt to Race in Defiance of Closing Order.

Special to The New York Times.

NEWARK, N. J., May 7.—Henry J. Bloemecke, Frederick Voight, and Sol De Vries, the officials of the Vailsburg board bicycle track, carried out their threat to open the track for Sunday bicycle racing to-day, and were arrested by Capt. Vogel of the Fourth Police Precinct. Two of the riders, Edward Rupprecht and Charles Franks, both members of the Bay View Wheelmen, who were entered on the programme for a quarter-mile dash, were also taken in custody at the finish of their race. All five men were taken to the Fourth Precinct Station and paroled to appear before Judge Sweeney to-morrow morning.

Only a few spectators managed to get into the track inclosure, but none of these was arrested. A squad of mounted police forced an opening through the crowd.

The Pianola Piano

"The Piano of TO-DAY" as well as "The Piano of the Future"

¶ Whether the player's desire be mainly for music, or more for manual practice, the Pianola Piano is equally responsive. Its keyboard is never obstructed. Its Pianola mechanism is always available. It combines every known facility for the expression of musical eloquence through the medium of the pianoforte.

THE PIANOLA PIANO is an instrument which meets as no other has heretofore done, every demand of every member of the home, as well as of the most varied and critical musical company.

It embodies an upright piano of the highest type, perfect in tone, action and appearance, and the means by which anyone can play upon it at any time, any one of 14,516 compositions covering practically the entire field of music. Few music stores could supply sheet music for all the selections that are available for it, and not even a professional musician could get from these printed scores what the Metrostyle enables the Pianola owner to get from the perforated rolls.

Such musicians as Grieg, Strauss, Chaminade, Faure, Moszkowski, Paderewski, and others too numerous to mention, have accepted the Metrostyle as a means of conveying musical ideas which can be conveyed in no other way, and have recorded their own interpretations of their own compositions by means of it. These records are in the form of a continuous and easily followed guide, so that the owner of the Pianola Piano, though knowing not one note from another, has the means, not only to produce good music, but to play a given composition exactly as the composer intended it to be played.

The Pianola Piano is now generally recognized as "The Piano of To-day." Grands and uprights of every representative make, of later models than can be found in any other collection of used pianos in the city, are being exchanged for it at a rate which shows that cultured people buy pianos, not for looks, but for music.

As the Pianola is the only piano player having the Metrostyle, so the Pianola Piano is the only instrument of its type which can be equipped with this device—considered by many of the world's greatest musicians as "indispensable." Pianos of all makes, and Pianolas, are taken in exchange for the Pianola Piano at a reasonable valuation. Descriptive literature and music catalogue sent to any address on request.

POLICE SPOIL ROAD RACE.

Prohibit Boulevard Speeding and Cyclists Quit Contest in Disgust.

Police interference spoiled the second annual road race of the Tiger Wheelmen yesterday on the Boulevard. After 200 riders had gathered for the start at Bedford Rest, orders were issued to prevent speeding. A hasty consultation resulted in the shifting of the course to Valley Stream, but as this entailed a seventeen-mile run before the thirty-mile race could be started, two-thirds of the entries turned back, and less than sixty faced the starter.

Defiance of police insructions caused the arrest of three wheelmen—Charles Lang and E. Lynch of the Bay View Club and A. Noff of New York—but all three were released from the Seventy-third Precinct Station on payment of a five-dollar fine.

When finally started from Valley Stream more trouble ensued, and protests and counter protests were filed in quantities, the officials finally deciding to award no prizes except for time, so involved became the question of the order of finishing. F. W. Eifler and Oscar Goerke made a great fight from scratch for the time trophies, finishing about a yard apart after a continuous drive covering the last two miles. Eifler took first in 1:19:30.

The first five men home were C. Richardson, Brower Wheelmen; M. Mench, Pelham team; H. Johnson, Tiger Wheelmen; N. McDonald, and T. C. Grof, Jr.

UNION MAN BLAMES UNIONS FOR TROUBLE

Labor Itself Responsible, Says Dock Builder Daly.

LAUDS BELMONT'S FRANKNESS

If Labor Men Were as Plain Spoken as He, Says Daly, There Would Be Less Mudslinging.

"I have the pleasure of answering a coward. If the labor men were as frank as August Belmont in stating exactly their side of the question there would not be so much mud slinging as has disgraced this body for the last two or three months."

That is what James J. Daly of the Dockbuilders' Union said to Delegate Hand of the Carriage and Wagon Workers at yesterday's meeting of the Central Federated Union in discussing the final report of the committee appointed by that body about a month ago to investigate the Civic Federation and force if possible the delegates who had made charges against labor members of the Federation either to withdraw the charges or to prove them.

Daly was one of the committee, and his remark was made after a long discussion on the report of the committee, which was adverse to the delegates who had made the charges. After the meeting was over the talk of a split in the Central Federated Union by th non-Socialists getting out of it was renewed.

The report was made by Jessie Lorimer of the Housesmiths' and Bridgemen's Union, Chairman of the committee. He said that three meetings had been held by the committee, at which the delegates making the attacks on labor leaders who were members of the Civic Federation failed to prove their charges, and in one or two cases refused to say anything. The report concluded:

"There is not one iota of proof that the Civic Federation is detrimental to the labor movement. The delegates who made charges against National and international officers of unions who are members of the Civic Federation utterly failed to make good on them, and we recommend that these delegates be censured."

Considerable talk ensued. Delegate Hand, one of those who had made charges, said that he had heard delegates of another committee in a saloon on the Bowery discussing the question of the Interborough strike while it was in progress. One of the men, continued Hand, said that he saw August Belmont as a member of a committee appointed to try and get the Interborough Company to take back the strikers, and that Belmont said:

"We went there with the object of doing some good for these poor devils who were in a losing fight. They went into the strike in a bull-headed way blindly on the advice of their leaders."

It was then that Daly made his retort. He continued:

"These people who are making the charges are evading the issue. The committee did not want to go into a saloon with a number of people who inveigled them in in order to distort anything they heard in confidence. The committee wanted to be left alone, but these people insisted on going with them. It is not Mr. Belmont or people like him, but people in the ranks of labor who are responsible for the harm that is being done for the labor movement."

STABBED IN MILLS HOTEL.

Mysterious Stranger Inflicts Serious Wounds on Attendant.

Mason Fieldman, a chemist, grew violent in Mills Hotel No. 1, in Bleecker Street, last night, and stabbed Joseph Lewis, an attendant, in the back of the neck and in the right arm. Lewis is in a serious condition at St. Vincent's Hospital. From papers found in his pockets the police of the Mercer Street Station lean to the opinion that Fieldman may be affiliated with the Russian revolutionary party.

A newspaper clipping describing the route that President Roosevelt would take on his way to Little Hungary on his visit to this city was found in Fieldman's possession. There were many letters in Russian, for which he begged when the police took them from him. He also had a razor, a sailor's knife, another smaller knife, papers showing that he had gotten his first citizen's papers in January of last year, a passport which proved he had been in Europe recently, four bank books on the Union Savings, the Bowery, the German, and the Citizens', showing deposits of more than $1,000, and $37 in cash.

Fieldman was registered at the hotel under the name of Samuel Green. He told the police he had used an assumed name because his people would be disgusted if they knew he was living at a Mills Hotel. His pockets contained many papers and circulars in the Russian language. There were also many chemical recipes and business cards bearing the name Fieldman. He said that he had lived at 53 West Thirteenth Street, which is a business block.

BOY STOLE PATRON'S WATCH.

Tale of Ingratitude as Related by Stanislaus Gorky, Victim.

A man who said he was Stanislaus Gorky of 59 Columbia Terrace, Hoboken, walked into the West Thirtieth Street Station last night and told the police that at an early hour in the morning he had been robbed of a watch, valued at $200. The thief, he said, was a ten-year-old newsboy.

According to Gorky's story, he had been talking with two friends in front of the Fifth Avenue Hotel, and was smoking his cigar, when an urchin came up with a single morning paper, which he importuned him to buy.

In pity for the lad, he searched for a nickel, and finally gave the boy a dime for his paper. All the while the boy had been holding the paper under his nose, and it was then that the watch was stolen. Detectives were sent out to find the boy, who is said to have been wearing a "peaked cap." Gorky could give no further description.

FAST SPEEDWAY BRUSHES.

A. C. Maynard's Invader Beat Kingmond in Straight Heats.

Light harness sport of a character seldom seen outside of a Grand Circuit meeting delighted a crowd of several thousand spectators that gathered on the Harlem River Speedway yesterday morning. Horses that in the past have won fame as stake winners were the most prominent performers, while finishes were so close in several heats as to cause a difference of opinion.

A. C. Maynard's former Grand Circuit winner Invader, 2:10, now owned by Andrew Crawford, carried off the honors of the day by winning two straight heats with the ex-trotting champion Kingmond, 2:09, driven by his owner, Claus Bohling. The ex-champion somewhat redeemed his reputation with his next trip over the stretch, which was made in company with the trotter Hilgar, and Juno T., Andrew Kane's bay trotting mare.

Thomas Sharkey, with his big-gaited trotter Hopper Grass, 2:14, that has been stepping in very hard luck of late, finally succeeded in winning a brush, and the crowd, which had been giving him the laugh every time he was defeated, cheered him lustily. His opponent was the bay trotter Brightlight, driven by Stewart Barr. F. H. Cohn's trotter, Admire, 2:19, did some fast work, and scored two straight heats against the old trotting favorite, Freeland, 2:17¼, driven by David Goodman.

Among the best pacing heats of the morning was a half-mile go between the bay gelding Don Riley, 2:07, driven by his owner, Andrew Phillips, and his old rival, Star Pugh, 2:09¼, which was handled by his trainer, Edward Lockwood, who drove him to his record in the Chamber of Commerce Stake. It was evident that the campaigner was not at his best, for he faltered in the stretch as though he were going to break, and Don Riley, taking advantage of this, passed him within a short distance of the finish post, and had a length to the good as they crossed the line.

Made-to-Measure Suits for Men

To critical men—men who are able to examine and compare, and decide, Wanamaker Made-to-Order Clothing makes its appeal. And if we were asked to account for this we should unhesitatingly attribute it to attention to details. Trifles make the sum of life—and they also make the sum of good clothes-making.

Our made-to-order suits have much style—that graceful charm which it is difficult to define.

Hard-finished worsteds in gray effects are the vogue now—and for elegance and stubborn wear they are unsurpassed. We have them a-plenty—at least one hundred patterns.

Consider this: If your suit is made to your measure at WANAMAKER'S you may feel safe in the thought that you are well dressed. And you'll look it, too. For ten, or even fifteen dollars more expended elsewhere, you couldn't be better clothed. Doesn't that make for contentment?

Another Superb Model In Women's Light Homespun Suits

We were the first to introduce the smart Long-Coat Suits this Spring, and today they are a perfect craze. But we were not satisfied with simply supplying the style first introduced, we immediately went to work preparing newer and handsomer models.

The new costumes ready this morning present the smartest and handsomest design brought out this Spring. The coat is long, semi-fitting, single-breasted and buttoned through. It has hip and handkerchief pockets, and collar and cuffs of white pique; skeleton-lined—just like a man's Summer coat—faced with self-material, and light silk yoke at the top. All seams are covered with white taffeta silk. The skirt is in nineteen-gore style, each gore plaited. The seams are all handsomely finished and piped.

The material is beautiful lightweight homespun, in light gray and tan mixtures. They are designed after a model of a famous tailor of the Rue Scribe, Paris, and are undoubtedly the most attractive dresses shown this Spring.

Measured by regular standards of value, they are well worth $30. Our special arrangements have enabled us to make the price

Handsome Pongee Silk Suitings At 75c a Yard, instead of $1.25

THE ROUGH SILKS are more popular than ever for outing suits this season, not only in the natural pongee effect, but the many other rich colorings. The Pongee Silk because of its light weight is the rough silk in heavy effect which is most desirable all through the Summer.

We found a manufacturer who had over-calculated his sales, and we secured this very fine collection of these handsome silks to offer at a saving of half a dollar a yard. This enables us to sell them for a price that brings these fine and beautiful silks down to the cost of the cheap imitations that have flooded the market.

The silks are 24 inches wide, of fine quality, in white, dark cream, natural pongee color, tan, delft and cadet blue, dark and light reseda, myrtle, navy blue, crushed raspberry, wine-color, cardinal, dark old rose and black. Regular $1.25 quality, at 75c a yard.

We still have a very large collection of the beautiful Double-width Foulard Silks of the regular $1.25 quality, at 75c a yard. They are in a large variety of handsomely printed designs in the best colorings. Being in the double width they save half the work of making. 40 inches wide, at 75c a yard, worth $1.25.

We also offer today one hundred pieces of Imported All-silk Messalines, with the soft finish and brilliant lustre, so desirable for dressy gowns; they are shown in a complete assortment of street and evening shades, as follows:

Four shades of navy blue, two shades of tan, six shades of brown, two shades of champagne, three shades of cardinal, three shades of gray, two shades of delft, two shades of reseda, and one each of ciel, turquoise, myrtle, lilac, yellow, old rose, strawberry, Tuscan, Frisson, Manille, Tokio, black, ivory and cream.

$10,000 FUND RAISED FOR COLORED Y.M.C.A.

Bishop Potter and Booker Washington Rouse Mass Meeting.

WASHINGTON PROUD OF RACE

Says He Would Rather Be a Negro Than a Chinaman, a Japanese, or Even an Englishman.

More than $10,000 was raised at a mass meeting held in Carnegie Hall yesterday afternoon for the purpose of helping the colored branch of the Young Men's Christian Association. Bishop Potter and Booker T. Washington were among the speakers. Fully 3,000 negroes were present.

Bishop Potter, after declaring that a Young Men's Christian Association was a splendid institution because it acted as a restraining influence, depicted the dangers to young men who came to New York from the South or West, and suddenly found themselves relieved from all restraint and liable to all sorts of temptations.

"There are at least three things that a young man needs," he went on to say. "He needs exercise and he needs an occasional bath. Besides exercise and bathing he needs something to occupy his mind and put the image of God into his heart. The Young Men's Christian Association supplies all three needs."

Booker T. Washington complimented his hearers, saying that it was by such examples as he saw before him that he would like his race to be judged. "I was never so proud of being a negro in my life as now," he announced. "I would rather be a negro than a Japanese, Chinaman, or even an Englishman.

"A conservative figure places the number of colored persons in Greater New York at 65,000. I have studied the condition of the race here with some care, and it is encouraging. New York colored people are far above the average to be found in most Northern cities. I went to see District Attorney Jerome the other day, and he told me that they were not more lawless than some other elements in the city.

"There is very little trouble about the future of a negro's soul. It is about his body that there is all the trouble. I believe in the Young Men's Christian Association because it takes care of his body as well as his soul. If there are any of you who think that you can spend your leisure time in barrooms, do with four or five hours' sleep, and stand up against a man who gets eight or ten hours' sleep, you are mistaken. You will wake up some morning and find that an Italian or Greek has your job, and you won't be able to blame race prejudice for it, either.

"There is something of a question in some quarters as to whether we are all right or not. That reminds me of a story. A colored soldier was lying wounded on the battlefield. A Chaplain leaned over him. 'Is there not some last message that I could give to your loved ones?' asked the Chaplain of the wounded soldier. 'Raise me up a little,' the soldier replied. 'You will find a little book in my upper waistcoat pocket. Take that out and take out what is in it.'

"The Chaplain did as he was bid and found between the leaves of the book a five-dollar bill.

'Hand it to me,' said the soldier. The Chaplain obeyed. Taking the bill in his hand, the soldier waved it above his head and said:

"'I'll bet you $5 I'm going to get well.'"

When the laughter had died away Mr. Washington added: "I'll bet you $5 the negro is all right."

In conclusion Mr. Washington urged those present to show that they were anxious to help up-lift their race not only by words, but also by their means.

BODY IN RIVER, TWO ARRESTS.

Police Think Samuel Brown, Missing Six Weeks, Was Murdered.

The body of Samuel A. Brown, thirty years of age, was taken from the North River at Thirty-sixth Street yesterday. He had been missing for more than six weeks. Investigation by the police of the West Thirty-seventh Street Station led to the arrest by Detectives Hayes and Boyle of two men who are believed to have been with Brown when he was last seen — William Anderson, twenty-one years of age, a dock builder living at the Vigilant Hotel, and Henry Meseke, twenty-eight years of age, a waiter, of 429 West Fifty-first Street. They were charged with being suspicious persons. More arrests will follow the police say.

Detectives Hayes and Boyle, after the recovery of the body and its identification, say they were told by a bartender at the hotel where Brown had lived, kept by Slevin & Kelly, that the dead man had gone down to the dock with five other men six weeks ago last Friday to have a fight. When the party returned Brown was not with it. One of the men who did come back was bleeding profusely from wounds in his face.

People about the hotel say that Brown's mother, Mrs. A. Brown of Madison, N. J., called at the hotel each week and left sums of money for his maintenance. She had called regularly since his disappearance, and when she could find no trace of her son, informed the police, who sent out a general alarm.

The police report that Anderson, one of the men arrested, declares he was not present at the fight, while Meseke avows that he has no knowledge of the affair, as he was drunk that day. He admitted to the police that there had been drinking on the dock.

TRIED TO HIDE CRIME.

Jersey Police Think Robbers Killed Morrell and Placed Body on Tracks.

Special to The New York Times.

BURLINGTON, N. J., May 7.—When a car of the Camden and Trenton Traction Company ran over the body of a man this morning at 1 o'clock, near the city, the authorities believe that a crime involving robbery and murder was uncovered. The car was running rapidly, and when near the Fish House, E. Austin, the motorman saw the body across the rails, directly in front of the car. It was partly doubled up, he says, with one leg across the track and the head and trunk pressed down closely between the rails. He applied the brakes and threw on the reverse power, but the distance was too short and the wheels passed over the body.

When picked up by the motorman and J. Dismond, the conductor, the body was cold, which led to the belief entertained by the police that it had been placed on the track after murder had been done for the purpose of hiding the crime.

The body was brought to the Morgue in this city, where it was identified as that of John Worrell, sixty-seven years old, of Florence. It was later removed to the man's home. Worrell was in this city late last night, and was seen walk-

SHOE HOUSES LOSE $40,000.

Wholesalers Swindled — Detectives Make a Capture.

Wholesale shoe houses have been swindled out of over $40,000 within the last week. The swindlers are of the class which District Attorney Jerome is seeking to punish by the bill recently put through the Legislature, which will enable him to convict those who get goods under false pretenses.

S. Samwick of 187 Broadway, whose detective bureau acts for the Shoe and Leather Association as well as the Merchants' Protective Association, on Saturday afternoon captured Jacob Lichtman, who is charged with having obtained $2,500 worth of goods from shoe dealers on March 29. Lichtman is now in prison. Samwick has been acting in co-operation with Assistant District Attorney Kresel in the effort to capture Lichtman. Soon after the man got the shoes, the complainants say, he had them removed, on a bogus judgment, from his retail store in Rivington Street, and then he disappeared. Under Samwick were six men who, besides scouring the city for Lichtman, kept his home, 32 Avenue B, under constant watch.

About 3:30 yesterday afternoon Lichtman was seen to slip into his house, where he was at once arrested. He said that he came home because he was about to starve and had to get something to eat. The detectives took him down to Magistrate Finn's court. Detective Reardon of the District Attorney's office tried to get the Magistrate to set the bail at $5,000, but the new Magistrate decided on $4,000. In default of bail Lichtman was locked up.

The method by which the Shoe and Leather Association has been victimized so often of late is simple enough. The swindler goes to a wholesaler and says he is free of debt and will be able to settle easily. Then he makes affidavit and gives his note. By spreading his trade among many he often can get $2,000 or $3,000 worth of goods. After the shoes are delivered he gets some kinsman or friend to swear out a judgment against him. The Sheriff comes, the shoes are removed by the "fake" creditor, and the wholesale firm is left in the lurch.

MRS. OLLIE GRAY BURIED.

Coroner Scholer May Subpoena Broker Stoneham for Inquest.

Mrs. Ollie Gray, the young Southern woman who shot herself at the Hotel Imperial on Saturday morning and left behind a letter addressed to Charles H. Stoneham, a mining broker and member of the firm of O. F. Jonasson & Co. at 44 Broadway, was buried yesterday afternoon in the Kensico Cemetery.

Only two mourners followed the casket, which was sent to the cemetery on an early afternoon train over the New York Central. Mr. Stoneham was not one of those who paid the last honors to the dead woman. While her body was being borne to its last resting place he was at work in his office.

One of the mourners was Mrs. Minnie G. Sanford of 62 West Sixty-sixth Street, with whom the woman lived when she first met the man who was known to her as Stoneham. The other was Charles M. Maxwell, manager of the Standard Storage Warehouse, at Fifty-third Street and Broadway, whom the woman had asked in one of the letters she left to become trustee and administrator of her estate. Mr. Maxwell had the body taken from the New York Hospital, where the woman died, early yesterday morning, to the undertaking establishment of John C. Taylor, of 453 Amsterdam Avenue. There was no funeral service.

Coroner Scholer intimated yesterday that he might subpoena Charles H. Stoneham as a witness for the inquest, the date for which has not yet been set. The broker left his home, at 87 Clerk Street, Jersey City, early yesterday morning and came to this city. He did not call on Coroner Scholer to claim the letter the woman left for him. This is still unopened in the Coroner's possession. Dr. Scholer said the broker could have it if he appeared in person to claim it with the proper identification.

IN GUISE OF DEPUTIES ATTACK STRIKE BREAKERS

Ruse of Union Sympathizers According to Chicago Sheriff.

CITY SPENDS QUIET SUNDAY

Goods and Coal Delivered Without Molestation—Employers to Double Non-Union Forces.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, May 7.—Reports that have been circulated for several days that "sluggers" were being sworn in as Deputy Sheriffs to incite riots and attack strike breakers were verified by the investigation made by Sheriff Barrett of the riot on Saturday night at the Gainsborough Hotel, in which two men were probably fatally injured. It was discovered that one of the union sympathizers arrested is Ole Olesen, a professional prize-fighter.

Olesen was arrested by policemen who quelled the disturbance which resulted in the shooting of John Noonan and Charles Daly in the entrance of the hotel. He wore a Deputy Sheriff's star, but declared he had found it. When seen by attaches of the Sheriff's office he was recognized as a man who had been sworn in under the name of Dent.

Noonan, who is a Deputy Sheriff, declared that he was only an onlooker and took no part in the fight in the entrance of the hotel. He, with Olesen, the police say, had laid an ambush for the express drivers who were attacked, and they are directly responsible for the fight which occurred.

The teamsters' strike to-day rested at the beginning of its third week with the employers apparently in the advantage. The teamsters now appear to be in a position where they must either yield or decide to extend the strike by calling out thousands of other workmen engaged in affiliated unions.

The Chicago Federation of Labor to-day took no action looking to an extension of the trouble, although a great deal of incendiary talk was indulged in.

The Federation decided to withdraw labor union funds from the banks which subscribed to the fifty-thousand-dollar fund to aid the employers and to urge individual members to do likewise.

Commencing to-morrow morning the business men will increase their efforts to bring the strikers to terms. Arrangements have been made by every business house involved in the trouble to double their force of non-union men. To-night it was said that all preparations had been made to start out 1,000 wagons manned by non-union men. Each of these wagons will be guarded by Deputy Sheriffs or policemen.

To-day the express companies made deliveries in all parts of the city. Each of the wagons carried two armed guards, and in not a single instance, it was asserted to-night, had the wagons met with opposition. Several firms involved in the strike replenished their coal supply. All these coal wagons were driven by non union teamsters, but no opposition was met with.

Brooklyn Scores Well Earned Victory Over Philadelphia by 4 to 2.

At least ten thousand baseball enthusiasts saw the Brooklyn and Philadelphia teams play at Washington Park yesterday, and this in the face of the overwhelming defeat sustained by Hanlon's men at the hands of the Quakers on the previous day. The crowd was good-natured, orderly, and seemed to be intensely interested in the contest, and while good, sharp plays were numerous and caused the "rooters" to enthuse, the fact was apparent that there were less noisy demonstrations than on other days of the week.

It was a well-played game throughout, especially by the Brooklyns, and for six innings it was nip and tuck between the two teams. In the seventh inning, however, the Brooklyns had much enjoyment at Duggleby's expense, batting out three singles and a triple, and scoring three earned runs. This made the score 4 to 2 in favor of the home team, and the advantage was too great for the Quakers to overcome.

Much of the credit of the victory was due to Scanlon, who, while sending three men to bases on called balls, kept the hits of the opposing batsmen down to three, which included a home run and a double. Besides, he batted safely twice out of four times at the bat, and scored one of the four runs. Dooin's wild throw to second, Gleason's fumble of a thrown ball, and two bases on errors, due to Duggleby, were the mistakes credited to the visitors, while the only error charged to Brooklyn was the failure of Owens to hold a thrown ball by Ritter.

Sheckard started the play by hitting to Abbott, and was retired. Lumley was more fortunate. He placed a difficult ball in the vicinity of second base, and while Gleason stopped its flight with one hand he was unable to catch the runner at first. Lumley's attempt at stealing was successful, in fact he reached third on Dooin's bad throw. On Mitchell's out, from Gleason to Abbott, Lumley crossed the plate with the first run for Brooklyn. In the third inning the first two men of the home team reached first, Sheckard by being hit by Duggleby and Lumley by four bad balls. A wild pitch while Sheckard was stealing gave the runner third, and Lumley ran to second on Mitchell's sacrifice. Duggleby's fumble placed Owens on first, filling the bases. Lewis ended the suspense by hitting to Dooin, and a double play was the result. In the seventh inning, after Ritter had gone out, Scanlon hit safely. Sheckard struck out. Then came singles by Lumley and Mitchell and a terrific hit by Owens to the right field fence, producing three runs.

McGee, the first batter for Philadelphia in the second inning, hit over the right field fence for a home run, and two bases on balls in succession, Courtney's single to right field, and Ritter's throw to Owens, which the latter failed to hold, scored Gleason in the sixth. The score:

Newark Defeats Jersey City by One Run in the Eleventh Inning.

Special to The New York Times.

NEWARK, N. J., May 7.—Newark won from Jersey City in an eleven-inning contest here to-day. Kelly was batted from the start, but notwithstanding this, the visitors held their opponents down by good fielding until the eleventh inning, when Cockman's single scored Mahling. The latter had lined out a two-bagger to left field, and would have been left on base but for Cockman's timely hit to centre. The score:

CROWDS VISIT YACHTS TO WEIGH CHANCES

Sunbeam, Hamburg, and Apache Inspected by Eager Sightseers.

AILSA AND THISTLE TRIED

Atlantic Will Be Drydocked To-day to Have Propeller Removed—Hildegarde Expected To-morrow.

There were hundreds of curious visitors to see Lord Brassey's Sunbeam, the latest arrival for the ocean yacht race across the Atlantic, as she lay in the Morse Iron Works dockyard, in South Brooklyn, yesterday. The arrival of the veteran English yachtsman with his auxiliary seemed to arouse a new interest in the international event. Every one was anxious to look over the new contestant, and, having now seen all the competitors, was quick to express a ready opinion on the issue of the race. For diversity, the predictions could scarce be more striking, though the majority still cling to the Atlantic's chance.

The Sunbeam was berthed next to the Hamburg, and the crews of the two yachts fraternized freely. The Englishmen have a high regard for the German schooner, and were free in their opinion that she would win the race. "What chance have we against a racer of that type," said one, "unless there is heavy weather? She'll leave us a hundred miles behind in a jiffy, and there's not a chance of our overtaking her. I tell you, American yachtsmen are figuring wrong if they're ignoring her. She'll outfoot anything in the race with conditions her way and make new figures, you mark my word.

"If there's heavy weather, that's another story. Of course, we'll be in it then, but Valhalla will win. Her tonnage and length will count. She'll fly a spread of canvas in a gale, weighted as she is, when we would not dare to raise half as much. The Apache will be well up, too, in that case.

"We're only in the race to encourage the sport, and do not expect to win. But we'll make a creditable showing. England's representatives may not finish first, but an English-built boat will. You take my tip."

This was the line that most of the Sunbeam's crew took. They seemed to feel the same sportsmanlike spirit that actuated Lord Brassey in entering, and they exuded good feeling. They were the centre of an admiring crowd a good part of the day, and seemed never to tire of answering the endless questions with which they were plied.

The yacht will be placed in dry dock today and her propeller removed. Then her new canvas will be stretched, and by Thursday she will be ready to leave the yard and seek anchorage outside, with daily spins.

The Hamburg, which lay beside her, will be docked to-morrow for a trifling overhauling, but it is expected she will leave the yard Wednesday, ready for the race. Just across the slip from them the Apache loomed, in dry dock. The work on her is nearly completed, and to-morrow she expects to be ready for her trying-out. Today her place will be taken by the Atlantic, which will leave Jacob's City Island yard, where she now lies, and will go to Morse's to have her propeller unshipped and final alterations made for the big race.

When the Hildegarde reaches New York to-morrow all eleven competitors will be here ready for the start. Besides the three in the Morse yard, Hamburg, Apache and Sunbeam, the Atlantic and Ailsa are at City Island. The Ailsa had a spin outside yesterday, and seems in mighty good shape for her hard task. The Thistle was also out, Commodore Tod taking her from her anchorage off the Atlantic Yacht Club quarters and keeping her out nearly eight hours. Tod is working harder than any one else to get his boat in shape, and he says quietly that the effort will pay when the result is announced.

The Fleur de Lys lies at Manning's yard and the Endymion at Tebo's. The Utowana is at Tietjin & Lang's yard in Hoboken. All three are in good shape, requiring little overhauling. The Valhalla lies anchored at the foot of Forty-second Street, in the Hudson, leaving only the Hildegarde to be accounted for. She was last reported from New London, cruising in the Sound, and is expected to-morrow.

By Friday all eleven will be anchored off Sea Gate, near the Atlantic Yacht Club's quarters, ready and anxious for the test day to come.

TENNIS MEN HERE TO-DAY.

Personnel of American Team Still Withheld—Other Teams Named.

The return of Holcombe Ward, the National lawn tennis champion, to-day to this city from Norfolk, Va., where he has been practicing with William A. Larned, ex-National champion, and Beals C. Wright, with Ward champion in the doubles, is expected to result in a clearing of the complications that have beset the committee having charge of the international American challenging team and bring forth an official announcement as to who the players are who will represent this country.

The followers of the sport, who are closely in touch with the situation, declare that the committee seems to be keeping something under cover, as the scheduled practice of the men at Longwood, at Philadelphia, Knollwood, Orange, and the Crescent Athletic Club is about to begin, and yet no official naming of the team has been made. They further point out the fact that the French, Belgian, Australian, and English teams have been selected and known for the past two or three weeks, and that the delay of the Americans is due to some hitch or disagreement among the players or the committee, the members of which are Dr. James Dwight, President of the United States Lawn Tennis Association; Richard Stevens, Robert D. Wrenn, and Raymond D. Little.

Naturally the delay in the naming of the team that will journey to England in the attempt to wrest the Dwight F. Davis Cup from the Britons is centred about Wright and William J. Clothier, in the minds of the followers of the sport—Wright, because of the early rumor that he was not to be a member of a three-man team, and Clothier, because of his failure to appear at Norfolk for practice, which in some quarters is said to be due to an injury that he recently received.

Several of the best informed of tennis followers in this city are of the opinion that when the official announcement of the challenging team is made it will only include Ward and Larned of the original four in which Wright and Clothier were also named.

LIVELY DAY AMONG OARSMEN.

Harlem River Crews Training Hard for Decoration Day Regatta.

It was a glorious day for the oarsmen on the Harlem River yesterday and there were few with aquatic pretensions who did not take a spin some time during the day. Early in the morning the boats began to appear and it was dark before the last shell was put away. The usual Speedway crowd had a treat in the morning, for there were frequent brushes between the rival oarsmen.

Many of the old "cracks" were seen. "Bill" Mulcare and George Young put out in a double from the Atalanta Boat Club. They were watched with much interest, as it is probable that they will enter the veteran race on Decoration Day, and great things are expected of them. Rowing a fast clip, they went up the river as far as Washington Bridge, when Mulcare broke his oar.

As the Harlem Regatta is only three weeks off, the majority of the clubs have decided on their entries, and the crews are rowing regularly with the final selections. Almost every club is boasting of at least one entry which is going to "tear things up." Both the junior and senior eights of the Nassau Boat Club have been picked, as well as a junior centipede four. Many of the critics along the river believe these two eights will have an excellent chance of winning their respective races. They are rowing well together and are training hard. The make-up of the two eights and centipede is:

Senior—J. C. Herbert, bow; W. H. Pumphrey, 2; R. H. Stettig, 3; G. Brasch, 4; W. Mehrhoff, 5; E. W. Stettig, 6; R. Stivers, 7; C. A. Cool, stroke, and E. Desvernine, coxswain.

Junior—W. Kohler, bow; P. A. Chanut, 2; G. H. A. Kohler, Jr., 3; J. O'Conner, 4; H. C. Nixon, 5; W. Nicoll, 6; J. Thompson, 7; E. W. Cool, stroke, and G. Wiemann, coxswain.

Centipede—G. B. Hayward, bow; A. C. Wiechers, 2; J. S. Johnston, 3, and F. Culley, stroke.

Although the Harlem Rowing Club has only two entries in the regatta, they can be depended upon to uphold the reputation of the club. There will be a junior double and a senior sculler, the former being composed of John Ryan, stroke, and J. O'Brien, while Fred. Fuessel will be the senior sculler.

The Metropolitan Boat Club has made a number of entries, its intermediate four being a very promising crew. The men rowed yesterday as follows: W. Dunn, bow; V. Clements, 2; J. Vedette, 3; R. Handy, stroke; W. J. Dunn, coxswain. They will be seated in this order on Decoration Day. The club is pretty confident of winning the junior double race with J. Salzer, bow, and V. Clements, stroke. The "Mets" will also enter a junior four-oared eight, manned by J. Groden, bow; T. Sullivan, 2; B. Peker, 3; L. Rivas, stroke, and W. J. Dunn, coxswain. W. Dunn is also entered for the intermediate single scull race.

Only one entry has been made by the Union Boat Club, but the members expect Francis and Loughman will be victorious in the intermediate double scull event.

The Dauntless Boat Club has a junior four-oared crew which is thought so much of that it will be entered in both the junior and intermediate races. This club has also a centipede four that may row in the regatta.

Much vigor is also being shown by the Long Island clubs. The Seawanhakas have a senior four which is composed of National champions, as follows: Farnnan, bow; McLaughlin, 2; Sheppard, 3, and Ryan, stroke. They went over a mile course in 5:16 yesterday. Ryan and Farnnan won the intermediate double championship at St. Louis last year. Sheppard won the intermediate singles at the same time. The Seawanhakas are having a new boat built by Ward.

The Ravenswood Boat Club will enter John Heben in the association single race in the Harlem Regatta.

Spring Wins Three-Mile Run.

M. Spring and L. Marks ran a great race in the three-mile event at the monthly games of the Pastime Athletic Club, held yesterday on the club's grounds. They started from scratch and, soon cutting down the other runners, they alternated in the lead until the beginning of the last lap. When the bell rang they were running neck and neck, but Spring had a little more at the finish and crossed the tape a winner in 16:52 3-5. The quarter-mile dash was a good race between J. F. Sweeney and J. M. Kelly, the former winning. Summary:

100-Yard Dash, Handicap.—Won by F. D. Reilly, (1 yard;) A. Bischoff, (6 yards,) second; J. Ledwoch, (6 yards,) third. Time—0:10 4-5.

Three-Quarter-Mile Run.—Won by P. Smallwood, (scratch;) L. Marks, (10 yards,) second; M. Spring, (scratch,) third. Time—2:28 4-5.

440-Yard Dash, Handicap.—Won by J. F. Sweeney, (25 yards;) J. M. Kelly, (25 yards,) second; A. Zink, (20 yards,) third. Time—0:54 1-5.

Putting 12-Pound Shot.—Won by J. M. Kelly, (8 feet,) actual put 35 feet 7 inches; F. Schaff, (7 feet,) actual put 36 feet 4½ inches, second; J. O'Hearn, (scratch,) actual put 41 feet 7 inches, third.

800-Yard Run, Novice.—Won by J. Trube; J. Finley, second; J. M. Kelly, third. Time—1:36 3-5.

Three-Mile Run, Handicap.—Won by M. Spring, (scratch;) L. Marks, (scratch,) second; K. E. Ziegler, (50 seconds,) third. Time—16:52 3-5.

Many Wheelmen on Cycle Paths.

Many of the local cyclists took advantage of the fine weather yesterday. Representatives of clubs with no regular runs scheduled took trips to Coney Island, Rockaway, and Valley Stream. The Coney Island Cycle Path attracted the majority. The Evergreen Wheelmen, Euclid Wheelmen, Century Road Club of America, Century Road Club Association, Montauk Wheelmen, Penn Glen Wheelmen, and many other club wheelmen were represented on the path.

About 150 riders took part in the joint run of the Century Road Club Association, St. George Wheelmen, Monroe Wheelmen, Prospect Wheelmen of Northern New York, Pelet Wheelmen, Brower Wheelmen, Akron Wheelmen, Navare Wheelmen, Speedway Cycle Club, Helvetia Wheelmen, Royal Arcanum Wheelmen, Acquack Wheelmen, Eagle Wheelmen, and Sunset Wheelmen, starting from Sixty-first Street and the Boulevard and covering about forty miles.

Have You Ever Waited until the last moment to catch a train and arrived at the station just in time to see it steam away?

Have you ever waited until the last day before taking seats for a play you wanted to see very much, and then found you could only get them by paying an extra price?

Have you ever put off renting the seaside cottage you wanted until you could only get it by paying a large premium?

Have you ever delayed making an investment you knew to be a good one, until the price had risen sharply?

If you have done any of these things, you will understand the position of the man who delays ordering The Historians' History of the World until after May 15th. On that date the prices will be increased. This most necessary work has been sold during publication at 43 per cent. less than regular prices direct to subscribers without the intervention of the agent. Now that it has been finally completed, higher prices will go into effect and the history will be given to the agents to sell in the ordinary way.

Now—To-Day Is the Time to Subscribe

Thousands who have been convinced of the value of this work have promised themselves that they will buy it sooner or later. They have read the reviews and the advertisements, and the letters of appreciation written by the most distinguished public men and scholars in the United States. They know that ex-President Cleveland says that it meets the educational need of Americans, who have neglected history, better than any other book. They have read Andrew Carnegie's opinion that this is exactly the world-history that is wanted in these wide-awake, strenuous days, giving only the essentials and omitting superfluous details. They know that President Harper, of the University of Chicago, has said that it is just the work for the busy American who wishes to have all the facts of world-history in a readable form.

Thousands of thoughtful men, we repeat, recognize the force of all these arguments, but they have delayed ordering because they have the bad habit of putting things off. In this case procrastination is the thief of money as well as time.

Do you not believe this work is a necessity to intelligent, cultivated Americans? Now is the time to get it. In a few days it will be too late to take advantage of the low prices which, for the sake of an effective advertisement, have been conceded during the introductory stage.

What This Work Is.

The Historians' History, as its name implies, gives the narrative of all history in the actual words of all the great historians. It has been built with a view of making history, which is the most valuable and most inspiring of all literature, easy to read, delightful and profitable instead of dry, heavy and dull, as so many people are apt to find it.

It affords the only satisfactory substitute for the enormous mass of special works dealing in a painfully prolix fashion with small periods or fragments of history. This has been accomplished with great skill by utilizing the most vital passages from the works of every great historian—all the masterpieces of historical narrative that will live forever—reproducing them in their entirety, and then weaving them together to make a consecutive story. One-third of the work has been translated from foreign languages. The total number of historians whose works have been quoted, cited or consulted by the editors is about 2,000.

This highly original and successful method of treatment shows every great historical writer at his best. They are supplemented and elucidated by editorial comment and by special contributions from the greatest living historians, such as Professor Hart, of Harvard; Professor Harnack, of Berlin; Professor Rambaud, of Paris, and Professor Cheyne, of Oxford, thus insuring a narrative which is distinguished, by common consent, for its perfect unity and compelling interest. The complete history of the world is here for the first time presented in scholarly, orderly and attractive form, and rendered accessible to the busy American.

If You Act at Once

you still have time enough to enter your subscription and get the benefit of the reduced prices which were decided upon in order to introduce the history in the quickest and most effective way. These prices, which can apply only to the first edition, are 43 Per Cent. Less Than Regular Prices.

As the hands of the clock come together at midnight on May 15th the list of subscriptions which can be accepted at the introductory prices will be closed.

Those who have not subscribed by that time will have irrevocably lost an opportunity to acquire the greatest world-history ever published, at 43 per cent. less than the regular prices.

If you live at a distance from New York, it is all the more necessary to make haste, for you must allow time for your order to reach this city not later than the 15th.

Keep an eye on the calendar.

Millions Wasted on Books.

Why wasted? Because they are spent on novels not above second-rate, books of short stories and cheap humor which are read to-day and forgotten to-morrow; subscription books that are made to sell, but rarely to be read, and various other kinds of printed matter not fit to be called literature.

It has been estimated that $20,000,000 is the amount spent yearly by the American people on books of purely ephemeral value. A relatively insignificant amount is devoted to works that are worth buying because they deserve to live.

Why not buy a book worth reading and re-reading as long as you live—a book that will be of incalculable benefit to your children and your posterity forever? The Historians' History of the World is of this enduring quality.

It is the most instructive literature, because it is the authentic record of everything vital and important that man has done since the dawn of civilization.

It is the best literature, because it is written by men whose work has stood the test of time.

It is at once a complete history of the world, and a library of the world's best historical literature. The most splendid chapters of all the greatest historians who have ever lived from Thucydides to Theodore Roosevelt, are included in it.

It contains that knowledge which is the most useful and inspiring for you to remember, presented in a manner that will cultivate your mind, and assist you incalculably in expressing your own ideas clearly and strongly, and proving yourself an abler man than your neighbor.

This work is an investment that will pay you constantly increasing dividends for the rest of your life.

The more you read it, the more it will benefit you.

The more you read it, the more you will enjoy it.

The more you read it, the better you will understand your own country and all the rest of the world, for the love of history is essentially human, and a knowledge of it, at this period of our development, is invaluable to every thoughtful American.

LIGHT FROM MR. MOODY.

The obstacles in the President's pathway to the acquisition of the rate-making power have been piled higher by his man of law. It may be that Senator ELKINS surmised something of that kind when he innocently asked Attorney General MOODY for an opinion upon "the Governmental power to regulate the operation of railroads, especially in respect to fixing rates for transportation." Mr. MOODY'S reply is learned, full, and fair. He tells the Senator from West Virginia that as Legislatures of the States have and exercise the power "to fix the maximum future charges of carriers by railroad" exclusively within the States, so Congress must have that power over inter-State transportation. Then follows the illuminating and also terrible part of this opinion from the chief law officer of the Federal Government:

> Although legislative power, properly speaking, cannot be delegated, the law-making body, having enacted into law the standard of charges which shall control, may intrust to an administrative body not exercising in the true sense judicial power the duty to fix rates in conformity with that standard.

The standard, aye, there's the rub. Nobody supposes that Congress will actually attempt to fix rates itself. That is out of the question, because the thing is impossible. It cannot constitutionally confer upon the Inter-State Commerce Commission the broad power to fix rates. It must itself first fix a "standard of charges" under and according to which the Commission may exercise its powers. What Mr. MOODY means by this is evident from the first section or division of his reply to Senator ELKINS, in which he says that "there is a Governmental power to fix the maximum future charges of carriers by railroad."

Where within the domain of finite wisdom will Congress find the knowledge and understanding to fix a maximum rate or standard? A whaleback steamer laden with wheat might send its cargo from Buffalo to New York for 5 mills per ton per mile. Shall Congress then declare a 5-mill ton mile rate to be the maximum rate? That would make it impossible to send a barrel of Bermuda potatoes from New York to Poughkeepsie. And how would a new railroad in Oregon, Arizona, or Oklahoma get along under a rate adapted to the business of the great commercial State of New York? How will the vast difference between the through freight business and the local freight business be treated? Would Congress enact that the charge for carrying freight should not exceed $100 per ton per mile on any railroad in the United States? That might leave margin enough for the President's venture in rate fixing. But Congress would not make such a fool of itself as to establish the $100 "standard," and anything under that figure might work mischief.

Indeed, the more the statesmen of the Senate and House study the Attorney General's opinion the less inclined they will be to sit down and draw a bill. The pen of an Esch or a Townsend might not falter, but the hand of any man of sense or experience in affairs would surely hesitate and draw back at the point where the "maximum future charges" would have to be put in. The Attorney General's opinion will not tend to increase Congressional confidence in the propriety and constitutional possibility of enacting into law the policy insisted upon by Mr. ROOSEVELT. The President himself, if he attentively studies his Attorney General's opinion, will very likely find his enthusiasm somewhat cooled and sobered by the principles it lays down and the limitations it draws. For instance, the Esch bill provided that whenever the Inter-State Commerce Commission shall discover any railroad rate to be unreasonable, it may declare in its place a just and reasonable rate subject to an appeal to the Court of Transportation, consisting of five Federal Judges created in the bill, the purpose of the appeal being to have the rate fixed "reviewed, and its reasonableness and its lawfulness inquired into and determined." The Attorney General tells Senator ELKINS that "the ratemaking power is not a judicial function, and cannot be conferred constitutionally upon the courts of the United States, either by way of original or appellate jurisdiction." It would appear, also, in his judgment, while the court may determine whether a rate fixed by legislative authority "would be confiscatory of the property of the carrier," and if found to be confiscatory may restrain its enforcement, this would appear to limit the function of the court to that which it performs now in respect of the operations of the Inter-State Commerce Commission. When the Commission has found and declared an unreasonable rate and an appeal is taken to a Federal court, the court determines whether or not the Commission's order finding the rate to be unreasonable was correct. In most cases thus far appealed the courts have found the Commission's orders to be incorrect. According to the Attorney General the court would go beyond its province if it passed judgment upon the reasonableness or unreasonableness of a rate fixed by the Commission itself.

There is matter enough in Mr. MOODY'S opinion to occupy the minds of the rate-making enthusiasts during the Summer. Already intimations come from Washington that in the end Secretary MORTON'S philosophic view will be accepted that "if all vicious discriminations can be abolished the question of rates will adjust itself." From the beginning that has been the belief of men most familiar with railroad subjects.

PAMPERING THE HIGH SCHOOLS.

The Board of Education is about to appropriate $1,000,000 or more to the purchase of "athletic fields" for the high school boys of the various boroughs. The plan proposed is to secure a plot for each borough not less than 400 by 600 feet, say 240,000 square feet, or an area equivalent to 120 average city lots.

We are convinced that this is an expenditure of a sort that should not be indulged in, should not even for a moment be thought of, until there is ample provision for the best schooling and the best treatment in every way for the younger pupils. No doubt it is a good thing for boys of from fourteen to seventeen to have athletic sports and good places in which to practice them. It would not be considered a good thing to give such boys these privileges if it were necessary, in order to do so, to increase the size of classes, lessen the efficiency of teachers, shut a considerable proportion of them from school for a part of each day, and subject them generally to crowding and bad air. No reasonable member of the Board of Education would entertain the proposition for athletic fields at such a cost to the high school boys. But they can have their fields only at precisely this cost to the pupils of the primary schools.

The high schools are in no danger of crowding such as exists in the schools for younger pupils. On the contrary, they have relatively plenty of room, excellent teaching in moderate classes, laboratories and admirable apparatus, and usually gymnasium facilities, and they lead a school life of luxury compared to that of many of the primary scholars. They are, moreover, the children of the relatively well-to-do classes of the population. If they were not, they would be at work instead of in the high schools. Before their costly privileges are extended, it is simply just and decent to provide for the much more pressing and imperative needs of their fellows in the primary schools, children, as a rule, of poorer parents. There are reported to-day to be some 65,000 children on half time in the schools, and the number is estimated at 100,000 when the schools are reopened in September. Every one of these children has a claim to full time infinitely stronger than the claim of the high school boys to their athletics. Not only have they a claim to full time, but to very much better instruction than they can get with the present provision.

It is a sound general principle that not a dollar should be appropriated for anything not absolutely needed in the high schools so long as there is a class in the lower schools of over forty pupils, and so long as there are pupils who cannot find a place in such classes. Nor this alone. When these conditions, which now seem like a dream of Utopia, are realized, it would still be the right of the younger children to be provided with ample play grounds before money is spent on the athletics of the high school boys. The latter will in one way or another get their exercise and their play. They are relatively independent of public provision, certainly much more so than the little ones. The latter are entitled to the best teaching under the best circumstances in the most wholesome environment before the money of their parents is spent for the benefit of those who are already in every way greatly favored.

FREEING CHARITIES.

One exceedingly sensible law was enacted by the Legislature at its latest session, and has received the approval of the Governor. It repeals the tax of one-half of 1 per cent. on all legacies for charitable and educational purposes. The resulting loss of revenue to the State is insignificant; the gain to the community will be far out of proportion to that loss. The total yield of the tax was estimated by the Controller at not more than $50,000 a year. The repeal will not only turn over the amount of the tax previously deducted from legacies for these particular purposes, but it will remove a very considerable obstacle in the way of making such legacies.

It must be remembered that the operation of the tax was intensely annoying to charitable testators. They felt, and not unnaturally, that it was absurd and oppressive to impose a fine upon charities the direct and generally permanent effect of which was to reduce poverty and promote education and thus add to the efficiency and revenue-producing power of the people of the State. That men should pay a reasonable tax on property transmitted by them to their immediate heirs, property that would enjoy the protection of the State Government, is unobjectionable. But charities and education contribute to lessen the burdens of the State, and it is almost ludicrous that the State itself should interfere to cut down that contribution. Gov. HIGGINS was from the start favorable to the measure, though he looked with disapproval on any bill that would reduce revenue, unless the revenue were in some other way provided; he withdrew this objection when he was informed of the extreme smallness of the revenue involved.

M. WITTE AND THE WAR.

It seems rather odd that the present President of the Committee of Ministers in St. Petersburg should have thought it necessary to come to the defense of his predecessor, M. WITTE, against the charge that he had anything to do, directly or indirectly, with bringing on the present war. For all the reading world familiar with the subject has long known that if M. WITTE'S counsels had been followed, there would have been no war. This has been made clear by a multitude of witnesses from all sides. M. WITTE was not even the author of the Siberian Road, though it would have been nothing to his discredit if he had been, since that road offered a means for developing Siberia such as could not be furnished otherwise.

Seeing that the road was authorized, M. WITTE set himself to work to make it pay, like an enlightened and modern man of business. But he distinctly opposed the acquisition of Port Arthur, with the construction of the Manchurian branch of the road, as likely to lead to international complications, and desired that Russia should stay out of China and improve what was unquestionably her own territory. It was the Grand Ducal Ring, represented in the Far East by that marplot and coward ALEXIEFF, that forced his hand and aroused in Japan an opposition that the ruling classes of Russia have most of all occasion to rue.

The agitation in Russia of the question of responsibility for the war is a hopeful sign, since it betokens the belief, even in Russian official circles, that that responsibility is serious and unpleasant. But the skirts of the former Minister of Finance are entirely clear. For the people who overruled him and, finally superseded him to attempt to make him the scapegoat for their own transgressions is a piece of impudence which would be quite out of the question in a country in which information on current events is more generally diffused than in the Russian Empire. We may almost expect next to see the Ring trying to throw the responsibility of the war upon Count LAMSDORFF, when it was they who took the negotiations with Japan out of his hands for the express purpose of forcing Japan to back down or fight.

PUBLIC SERVICE AND ARBITRATION.

At a recent session of the National Civic Federation the question "Should corporations rendering public service be required to arbitrate all differences with employés?" was discussed at great length. The topic seems to have been suggested by the recent strike on the lines of the Interborough Company in this city. In the light of the incidents of that strike, of the causes which led up to it, the means taken to win it against the efforts of the company to maintain a satisfactory service and the net results to employés and the public, it would seem that this question admits of satisfactory answer in very much fewer words than were used in discussing it.

Our answer would be that no corporation, public, semi-public, or private, should be "required" to arbitrate any difference which may arise between it and its employés. There are many good reasons for this view of the matter, but the best of them all is that there is no possible way of enforcing the decision of arbitrators, so far as the labor unions are concerned, unless the leaders of those unions discover an advantage in respecting it. Another reason, almost as good, is that under a system which erected every demand into a subject for arbitration, such demands would be incessant, unreasonable, and in many instances made solely in the hope of gaining advantages, through the tendency of all arbitration to effect compromises, which would be impossible of attainment in any other way. A third reason, in itself sufficient, is that anything resembling compulsory arbitration is inimical to the principle of the open-shop, which should be maintained by every corporation rendering a public or quasi-public service.

What is needed vastly more than compulsory arbitration is the rigid enforcement of law. A demand which needs to be sustained by the measures of violence to which the unions of unskilled labor naturally turn when they find themselves opposed by their employers, is usually an unjust or unreasonable demand. No more serious menace to the rights and liberties of the people can be found than lies in the assumption by organized labor that it has the right to "tie up" a public utility under the demands of a section and that if unsuccessful in its efforts to do this, it may resort to violence and commit crimes against persons and property. Ninety per cent. of the labor employed by public service corporations is so nearly unskilled that it can be replaced at short notice, on any scale of substitution demanded by the public interest. Half of this ninety per cent. seek such employment because, in proportion to the work required, the pay is exceptionally good. When the pay of skill and industry is demanded by men who are not skillful and do not care to be industrious, academic talk about compulsory arbitration savors of absurdity.

PUSHCARTS AND IMMIGRATION.

Health Commissioner DARLINGTON has expressed an opinion which, if correctly quoted, seems to involve a non sequitur. He said:

> I have been studying immigration ever since we began to look into the pushcart problem, and I have become firmly convinced that the health of the city and the protection of the taxpayer demand a further restriction of immigration.

Would it not seem to the casual student of civic problems that what was first needed was a further restriction of the pushcart nuisance? Of the people who come here as immigrants thousands annually remain in New York for no other reason than that here they can make a living by merchandising in a small way, and that the peddler's license may almost be had for the asking. It is true that they cannot be redistributed arbitrarily, and that if they elect to remain here, crowding our already congested east side, they have the right to do so. But they would not want to remain here if denied the opportunity of peddling, and the reason they prefer New York to any other place on the American Continent is that here they may peddle in utter disregard of the public interest. A very large proportion of this class of immigrants would probably not come to New York at all if they were not advised that the peddling privilege was freely open to them.

It is this abuse of license granting for the accommodation and benefit of the small political leaders of the east side districts which needs regulation.

TOPICS OF THE TIMES.

Humor from the Far West.

What will pass with some people for a good story is told by one of the Pacific Coast papers about two Seattle newsboys who went to the theatre and from the topmost gallery viewed with breathless interest a performance of "Hamlet." With constantly increasing excitement they watched the assorted assassinations, murders, suicides, and killings which make that genial masterpiece so great a favorite with the sensitive and cultured. After the curtain fell on the last act there was a moment while the audience sat silent and spellbound—the name of the actor who played the Dane, alas, is not given in the tale!—and then the hush was broken by one of the boys, who made a clattering rush for the nearest stairway, calling back to his companion, "Come on, Jimmy, dey'll be extries out on dis!" Now, what a pity it is that this good story cannot possibly be true. And it certainly cannot, at least in the way the narrator intended to have it taken, which obviously was in the way of assuming that a newsboy could see a play and mistake its fictions for reality. Presumably the Seattle newsboy is a little less sophisticated than the newsboy in San Francisco, Chicago, or New York, but the difference must be far too small for him to make any such mistake. The only theory on which the story can be saved for the critical is an extremely difficult one to accept, for it is the theory that the newsboy's joke was intentional and made with the full appreciation of its excellence. The trouble with this is that though newsboys have humor enough and an occasional gleam of wit, neither is of exactly this kind, but is invariably cruder and more direct. The jest as presented has all the characteristics of a manufactured article—of a simplicity that is amusing because of its artificiality. It is a bit cruel and not at all profitable thus to analyze a joke, but it must be done, now and then, just to keep the jokers in mind of the fact that their license has its limits.

Our Case Neatly Diagnosed.

Up in Prince Edward Island, which is a much pleasanter part of the sub-arctic regions than is supposed by the millions of Americans who are as doubtful of its exact position as they are whether the "Edward" should have an "s" on the end of it or not, there is a surprisingly live-in-able little city called Charlottetown the very name of which is quite unknown except to its own delightfully self-satisfied inhabitants. There, naturally enough, is published The Charlottetown Guardian, a newspaper that never forgets that it is the responsible exponent of public opinion in the capital of a self-governing granddaughter of a self-governing daughter of the great British Empire, on which, as is well known, the sun never dares to set for fear of what the empire would do if it weren't watched. Thus laboriously do we get to the important fact that The Charlottetown Guardian knows quite a lot about "megalomania"—knows, for instance, that the victims of that form of insanity are instantly recognisable as such, even by the maddest of their companions in the asylum where they are confined; knows that the megalomaniac is a profoundly pitiable spectacle as he raves of his limitless wealth, his limitless power, or his dizzy elevation. And what The Guardian thinks it knows is that the United States is suffering from quite the worst case of megalomania ever recorded, and demonstrates its nearness to a dismal end by the frequency with which it voices the belief that some day Washington will be the seat of Government for a country extending from Panama to the Arctic Ocean. Just listen to this epitome of our recent history as prepared by the able diagnostician: "The patient was well-doing, enterprising, and possessed a fine estate. But whether from hereditary admixture of African and other strains with his Saxon blood, or from disappointed affection, or from an overweening admiration of himself, his head became turned. He whipped a Mexican and a Spaniard, neither of them half his size, took possession of their lands, and then began to boast that he could 'lick all creation.' Then he began to conceive that none was so rich or half so handsome as he, and that all the women were in love with him. What last Christmas he made you."

THE PATTERSON CASE.

Hearty Approval of The Times's Criticisms of the Trial.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I have read with much satisfaction the editorial on "The Patterson Case" in your to-day's issue. The rules for conduct of such cases are ably and justly laid down by you. Your severe criticism of the prosecuting attorney is in accord with the universal opinion I have heard expressed.

Assistant District Attorney Rand began his address to the jury with the statement that "this was neither a court of morals nor of chivalry, but of law." He seems to have kept as far as possible from the former two and to have perverted the law of "innocent until proved guilty" into "guilty, for I say it."

One proved guilty deserves neither protection nor sympathy, but an accused on trial for life is guaranteed under our laws every assumption of innocence until guilt is established, not by the assertions of prosecuting counsel, but from evidence beyond a reasonable doubt by the verdict of a competent jury.

The extraordinary methods of persecution practiced by some of our attorneys and permitted by some of our Judges would make the most innocent fear that law established for protection. Is there wonder that the poor girl, in her semi-conscious moments after the trial, said to her aged father that she felt she had been beaten until her whole body was sore? The lashing of a caustic tongue and the stabs of a finger of scorn strike deeper than the blows of the pugilist and are not justified when innocence under the law is presumed.

What could have been more heartless than denying her the near presence of her only protector—her father—and in his stead substituting for a while at least the gruesome skeleton.

If such be a court of law, give us the courts of morals or of chivalry. E.

New York, May 5, 1905.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Allow me to thank you for your ringing editorial this morning on the Patterson case. It is one of the best leaders you have ever printed, and will be read and deeply pondered. Rand's conduct was simply shameful

"Nan Patterson ought to die," seems to reason Rand, "that I may win fame." Your editorial goes to the spot. More strength to your elbow. R. A. DIX.

New York, May 5, 1905.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

As to the article in issue of this date—"The Patterson Case"—"them's my sentiments." only mine are even a little more so.

It is said of our criminal law practice that it presumes the accused innocent until proved guilty, yet we have the constantly recurring spectacle of the public attorney, paid by the people, setting this presumption at naught and exploiting himself in so doing. Worse than that even is the spectacle of the Judge who by permitting it becomes a party to this perversion of the American theory of justice. C.

New York, May 5, 1905.

A Typewriter for the King.

According to report, of course veracious, King EDWARD is about to give his royal sanction to the typewriting machine. At any rate, a particularly fine specimen of that labor-saving utensil has been or is about to be sent to him by an enterprising American manufacturer of the same, and of course that comes to the same thing. The machine is said to have a mahogany frame-work—everybody knows that mahogany is of all woods the best qualified to take the place of steel where strength and rigidity are to be combined with lightness—and the keys to be pressed by the royal fingers will be made of ivory. But there! even if one does have some difficulty in believing that the King is going to do much typewriting with his own hands, it is entirely probable that with the practical common sense which characterizes him he has seen the wisdom of putting the stamp of his personal approval on an exponent of modernity and progress that has made its way with curious slowness among his cautious subjects. Of course, great numbers of typewriters are already used in England, but it is a fact that they are still under the ban of many Britishers, even in the business world, and their employment for anything like personal correspondence is there quite generally considered insulting. Years ago the same notions prevailed here, but they are now quite forgotten in commercial circles, and the typewriter is fast driving the pen from every fastness except the love-letter. That is as it should be. There is no more reason why letters should be written by hand than that books should be made in the same way, and the advantages of printing them are as great in the one case as in the other. The typewriter permits the utilization for profitable purposes of enormous amounts of time and mental energy that without it must be devoted to a slow, tiresome, and expensive process of handwork. It saves the readers of letters and manuscripts as much as it does their writers, and against the new method is only its newness.

LIKES THE SUBWAY SIGNS.

A Brooklynite Who Enjoys Them and Asks for More.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

What is to be done about the advertising signs in the New York Subway? Are the narrow-minded few to have their way—are the signs to be removed?

The Subway is a business convenience to business people. A marble mausoleum it may seem to be, but never intended as a work of art—rather a solution of the practical problem of quick transportation and the facilitation of business and the needs of business men. Therefore let us have business advertisements in it.

It is too late now to kick over the foolish expenditure of money represented in the original decoration of the Subway. Artistic (?) tiling in the various stations of the line is not at all necessary. The average person does not go into the Subway to imbibe art, but he does, involuntarily, notice and read the advertisements. And they are by no means an eye-sore. The advertising of to-day is not the monotonous reading matter and horrible illustration of former days. Now it is attractive in every way, well written and strengthened with superior and catchy pictures.

Long may that gloomy underground passage in "little old New York" blaze with ads—and plenty of them!

Vast Consumers of Coffee.

From The London Telegraph.

PARIS, April 25.—Coffee, according to the latest idea of some French doctors, is altogether pernicious. It is described as incomparably more harmful to the nerves than tea, and it also damages the digestion. There are, indeed, grounds for believing that it is actually more dangerous than alcohol, and if there be anything to choose between a cup of coffee and a "petit verre," many Paris doctors nowadays will advise you to plump for the little glass, as it leads to a slower death. Physicians holding this view should go at once to the Island of Groix, off the Brittany Coast, ten miles from Lorient, to observe there the effects of a coffee diet. The inhabitants, according to statistics, rarely drink or even eat anything else. The island harbors 5,300 souls, but the able-bodied adult male population is away fishing nearly all the year round. The remaining 3,000 women, children, and old men consume 88,000 pounds of coffee annually—that is to say, nearly 30 pounds per head. This is held to be a record. For hundreds of families coffee and bread are served in American bars to create a thirst. The bean is eaten roasted, as Many children are nourished entirely on coffee soup up to ten years of age. Yet there is no report that the nerves of the Groix islanders are in a more highly strung and irritable state than those of Parisians or Londoners.

Haeckel Kills the Soul.

From The London Telegraph.

BERLIN, April 22.—Prof. Haeckel has concluded his course of lectures in Berlin, and has succeeded in arousing intense public interest in the subject of which he is a master. In his final lecture he again denied the possibility of the existence of an immortal soul, showing that what is generally called the soul is a mere function of the brain, and a development of the moral faculties possessed by the higher domestic animals, such as fidelity, attachment, and self-sacrifice.

Discussing the problem of religion, the lecturer made remarks which many quarters consider beneath the dignity of a man of his reputation. He recommended, for instance, the use in the new so-called Protestant Cathedral at Berlin of automatic praying machines, and, replying to the attacks made on him in the press, said: "What I have told you, to the best of my knowledge pure scientific truth, is described as invention and lies. We naturalists, however, have a somewhat different conception of truth than prevails in church circles." He also said: "I have been blamed for saying that the Papacy is the greatest swindle that ever dominated the world of thought. I will substitute the word 'humbug' for 'swindle.'"

A certain distinguished minister, who is unusually plain in physical appearance, tells this story on himself: He was visiting at a country house and was being shown around the place by his host's little daughter, a pretty and precocious child of six. She was somewhat shy at first, but gradually grew accustomed to her distinguished visitor, finally asking him, with serious face:

"Did God make all things?"

"Yes, my dear."

"Did He make you?"

"Yes, He made me, my child."

"And did He make us, too?"

"Yes."

"Well, He must have got a good deal better as it grew He made you."

INDEPENDENCE ASSERTED FOR STATE OF KUNANI

Defense of Leader of Alleged Plot Against Brazil.

MAY REVIVE AN OLD DISPUTE

Swiss Arbiters in 1900 Rendered a Decision Giving France Only a Small Portion of the Territory.

MADRID, May 7.—Sarrion de Herrera, ex-King at Arms of the Spanish Court, who is charged with conspiring against the Government of Brazil, was interrogated by a magistrate to-day.

De Herrera maintained that Kunani had been recognized as an independent State since 1872, and that the recruiting of men in Europe for the service of that State was perfectly legal. He denied the existence of a plot against Brazil, and asserted that the diplomatic relations between Brazil and Kunani were most cordial. He said he had been residing in Madrid for two years in the capacity of Minister for Kunani to Spain, Morocco, and the Holy See.

De Herrera said that a revolutionary Colonel named Casero had recently visited London in order to arrive at an understanding with the General Committee of the Free State of Kunani and to purchase war stores.

It is possible that the alleged plot against Brazil discovered in Madrid will reopen the old dispute between France and Brazil regarding the territory known as Kunani or Counani. This territory was practically an independent State until five years ago, though since the year 1713 France and Portugal, and later on Brazil, had claimed it. It lies between the Rivers Oyapok and Karseven, the Atlantic Ocean, and the Tumuk-Humak Mountains, south of French Guiana.

In 1895 gold was discovered in the Carserenne District, and this led to the quarrel regarding sovereignty over Kunani becoming acute. There was a clash between French and Brazilian troops, and it was decided to submit the matter to the arbitration of the Swiss Government.

After exhaustive investigation the arbiters in 1900 rendered a decision awarding to Brazil 147,000 square miles of the territory and to France 3,000 square miles of the country around the Tumuk-Humak Range.

In February, 1904, Adolphe Drezet, claiming to be President of the "Republic of Kunani," arrived in Paris seeking recognition of his alleged Government by France and saying that the people of Kunani refused to accept the decision of the arbiter.

According to Drezet, Kunani had two or three times as much territory as France, with a population of about 200,000 colonists and 1,000,000 Indians, all of whom, he alleged, supported the new Government. Last September an unsuccessful effort was made to obtain recognition by the United States of the so-called Free State of Kunani.

AUTOBOATS IN LONG RACE.

Seven Leave Algiers for Toulon—Warships Acting as Escort.

ALGIERS, May 7.—Seven autoboats started at 6 A. M. in the long-distance race from this port to Toulon. Lewis Nixon's Gregory, which was to represent the United States in the contest, was not present.

Every precaution has been taken to prevent mishap, two cruisers and seven torpedo-boat destroyers accompanying the racers. The sea was somewhat choppy, which interfered with the progress of the boats.

A mail steamer which arrived here this afternoon reports passing the boats, two of which were being towed. Their arrival at Port Mahon is expected to-mororw.

LEADS IN UNIONIZED LABOR.

Conditions as to Employment in This State Better Than in 1902.

ALBANY, May 7.—Statistics recently received by the State Department of Labor show that only three foreign countries have as many organized working people as New York State and in proportion to population New York leads even these. Members of labor unions in Great Britain and Ireland number 1,902,308; in Germany, 1,276,831; in France, 715,576, and in New York, 400,000.

The ratio is 1 to 18 inhabitants in New York, 1 to 22 in Great Britain, 1 to 44 in Germany, 1 to 53 in France.

"It is a significant fact," says the department, "that the hours of labor are short or long in almost the precise ratio of the degree of organization."

The department's quarterly bulletin says that, "in the last quarter of 1904 the improvement in industrial activity which began in the Summer became so pronounced that the percentage of idleness was smaller than in 1903 or even 1902. Only 108 per 1,000 were reported idle at the end of October, 1904. The improvement was fairly general throughout the various trades and industries with the single exception of building."

Are Stenographers Unappreciated?

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I wish to direct your attention to the numerous complaints that have been made regarding the poor pay which stenographers receive for their services, and which ought to be called to the attention of the public.

Now, how can an employer expect reliable, accurate, and neat work at a stipend of $12 or $15 weekly, and also command a self-respecting, intelligent, and competent man or woman to correct and shoulder some of the great blunders and responsibilities of an employer in return?

Another matter, and that is, there are thousands of men and women who are employed as stenographers and typewriters who lack education in grammar, spelling, composition, &c., which are the most essential things for a stenographer to know thoroughly before branching out in this art. It seems that every Tom, Dick, and Harry and Mary Ann and Jane takes up this profession without knowing the rudiments of English.

Again, there are in this city a number of "stenographic and business schools" which make the claim that they guarantee to teach stenography and typewriting in three months' time, and at the expiration of this time they give the positive assurance of securing lucrative employment. Now, any one who is thoroughly familiar with this business will say that this is entirely preposterous as well as amusing, and is done solely for the purpose of deceiving those who are compelled to take up this profession for a livelihood.

I believe that a stenographer ought to be considered the head of the office, and that more appreciation and reasonable salary should be given. MORRIS MARKS.

That Dust Nuisance.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

It has been my intention for some days past to second the protest of "Pro Bono Publico" against the almost unbearable clouds of dust that sweep through the downtown streets these days. Let every sufferer raise his voice against such unhealthy conditions and let's see if the authorities cannot be moved to cause an abatement of this nuisance.

I have another complaint to make about dust, and that is that I object to having it stirred up in places where I am compelled to take whole chunks of it into my lungs or else put myself to serious inconvenience by keeping away from them. I refer to the waiting rooms of ferry houses, railroads, and the platforms of the Subway. If the law makes it a misdemeanor to expectorate in public places, would not common sense seem to indicate that the Board of Health should get after those who do much more to the injury of the public health?

Fitzhugh Lee's Eulogy of Lincoln.

From Leslie's Weekly.

Gen. Fitzhugh Lee's eulogistic references to Lincoln in his recent address before the joint session of the New York Legislature are another evidence that the passions and prejudices of the civil war era are forever buried in the United States. No more striking tribute was ever paid to the martyr President than was passed upon him by this former eminent Confederate soldier. It recalls the eulogy paid to Sumner, just after his death, by Senator Lamar, also a distinguished adherent of "the lost cause." Lee's eulogy of Lincoln was the last public utterance of one of the bravest soldiers of the South, and, like the dying words of Gen. Grant on Mount McGregor, it was an eloquent plea for perpetual peace.

LONG AGO.

When all the dreams of our life have vanished,
When love is banished
And hope has fled,
We turn away from the bleak to-morrow,
To walk with Sorrow
Among the dead;
We look once more on the loving faces
And sunny places
We used to know;
And lose for a time our hurt and sadness
Within the gladness
Of long ago.

The days are long, and the days are dreary;
Our hearts are weary
And in distress,
As through the blur of our tear-wet lashes
We see the ashes
Of happiness.
From brooding over our lives left lonely,
We seek the only
Escape we know,
By going back to the sweet affections
And recollections
Of long ago.

Our dreams of love and our golden visions,
The fond ambitions
Of other years,
By stern decrees of the Real, broken,
Have left their token
Of unshed tears.
Without remorse are the fates that sever.
Those hopes we never
Again may know;
But although lost, they renew their glory
Within the story
Of long ago.

When love proves false and we seem forsaken,
Our spirits shaken
With sorrow sore,
There is one solace Time can't deny us,
Which lingers by us
For evermore.
We dream on our lips a soft mouth presses,
The sweet caresses
We used to know;
Our hearts yet revel amid the pleasures
And cherished treasures
Of long ago.

SCHILLER GLORIFIED AS PHILOSOPHER, POET

Concert at Carnegie Hall Begins Centennial Celebration.

MAYOR McCLELLAN'S EULOGY

Says Great German Left Deathless Heritage in His Labors for Truth and Beauty.

A representative gathering of Germans assembled in Carnegie Hall last night when the celebration of the one hundredth anniversary of the death of Schiller began with a concert under the auspices of the United Singing Societies of New York. Every seat in the large hall was taken. In the boxes sat representatives of Germany, Austria, and Switzerland, while on the stage were members of the various singing societies, a choir of women forming a chorus 800 strong, and an orchestra of sixty artists under the leadership of Carl Hein. All the numbers were by great composers, the poems of the great German poet and philosopher set to music.

In the central box was Baron Speck von Sternburg, the German Minister, and members of his staff, including Freiherr von dem Russche, Counselor of the German Embassy, who had been specially delegated by the German Emperor to represent him at the Schiller celebration; Baron L. Hengelmuller von Hengervar, the Austrian Ambassador, and Baron Carl von Giskra, the counselor of the embassy, were in the next box, and further on were Dr. L. Vogel, the Minister from Switzerland, and members of his staff; K. J. Buenz, the German Consul; Thomas von Dessewffy, the Austrian Consul; J. Bertschmann, representing Switzerland, and the Vice Consuls resident in this city.

Others occupying boxes were Mayor McClellan, Carl Schurz, ex-Mayor Low, Herman B. Scharmann, President of the Liederkranz; Franz von Briesen, President of the Arion Society; President Fornes of the Board of Aldermen, Judges Bischoff, Dugro, and Newburger, and ex-Mayor Schieren of Brooklyn. The orators of the evening, the Rev. Alfred W. Hildebrand, Mayor McClellan, and George von Skal, were escorted to the platform after the "William Tell" overture had been played. The Rev. Mr. Hildebrand delivered a eulogy on Schiller, after which Mayor McClellan made his address. The Mayor's was the only address in English. It was heartily applauded. He said in part:

THREE GENIUSES AROSE.

"There never has been a time in the history of the Teutonic race when it needed men that men were not forthcoming. The close of the eighteenth century and the beginning of the nineteenth saw Germany at the mercy of a foreign conqueror, her liberties destroyed, her political progress arrested, and her intellectual life almost at a standstill. It was then, when they were most needed, that the three great geniuses of modern Germany burst upon the world—Kant, Goethe, and Schiller, the three men to whom Germany owes her renaissance, to whom the modern empire owes its being. These three great leaders of men made the world appreciate that the German giant was not dead, but only sleeping, and by the power of their intellect and the force of the truth that was in them awoke that giant to join in the onward march of modern progress and modern civilization.

"Kant the reasoner, Goethe the sage, Schiller the philosopher, complemented and supplemented one another in the development of the new manifestation of a National spirit, and the recrudescence of the Teutonic love of liberty and of freedom of thought and of action. But of these three Schiller is the one whose fame will be most enduring, whose life work has meant most, not only to the people of Germany, but to the people of the whole world.

"The day may come when Schiller the dramatist will no longer be read, when Schiller the poet may be forgotten; but Schiller the philosopher, the apostle of beauty and of truth, will live forever.

"Schiller at all times was far above the meanness of self-interest, particularly in its meanest shape—a love of money.

AN AGE OF SORDID THINGS.

"It is this lesson which is of such vital importance to us to-day in this age of commercialism and industrialism, which tends in all too many instances to the worship of the golden calf.

"As long as Schiller is remembered beauty and truth must be living realities.

"'These kingdoms,' as Carlyle says, 'which Schiller conquered were not for one nation at the expense or suffering of another. They were soiled by no patriot's blood, no widow's, no orphan's tear; they were kingdoms conquered from the barren realm of darkness to increase the happiness and dignity and power of all men; new forms of truth, new maxims of wisdom, new images and scenes of beauty—won from the void and formless infinite, a possession forever to all the generations of the earth.'"

Mr. von Skal delivered the oration, and in the first mass chorus, "The Artists," which followed, these singing societies took part:

Kreutzer Quartet Club, Franz Abt Schiller, Franz Schubert Männerchor, Schlichterner Quartett Club, Gesangverein Arminia, Rheinpfälzer Männerchor, Gesangverein Harmonia, Gesangverein Heinebund, New York Sängerrunde, Mozart Verein, Gesangverein Eichenkranz, Gesangverein Oesterreich, New York Männerchor, Beethoven Männerchor, Schwäbischer Sängerbund, Bremer Gesangverein, Allemania Corialia Männerchor, Yorkville Männerchor, Gesangverein Uhlandbund, Arion Liedertafel, Riverside Quartett Club, Gesangverein Schillerbund, Bronx Männerchor, Van Nest.

The same chorus, supplemented by the female choir, impressively rendered the final part of the programme, Schiller's "The Lay of the Bell." In this oratorio number the soloists were Mme. Corinne Rider Kelsey, soprano; Miss Paula Woehning, alto, William Rieger, tenor; John Bolze, baritone, and Emil Fischer, bass. Mr. Fischer also gave Haydn's "The Division of the Earth" as a solo.

Other numbers on the programme were "The Words of Faith," by the Singing Society Schillerbund; "Hymn to Joy," by the Singing Society Eichenkranz; "The Morning Song," by the Schwaebischer Saengerbund; "Ode to Spring," by the Mozart Verein and the Franz Schubert Maennerchor, and "Three Words I Tell You," by the Kreutzer Quartet Club. Rheinpfaelzer Maennerchor, and Arion Liederrafel. The mass chorus also sang "The Trooper's Song," and Mme. Kelsey sang as soli "The Youth at the Brook" and "Night and Dreams."

ST. STEPHEN'S CENTENARY.

Addresses by Bishop Potter and the Rectors of Neighboring Churches.

The celebration of the one hundredth anniversary of St. Stephen's Protestant Episcopal Church in West Sixty-ninth Street occurred yesterday. In the presence of Bishop Potter the Rev. Dr. George A. Strong, rector of Christ's Church, felicitated St. Stephen's rector, the Rev. Nathan A. Seagle, and his congregation on the rounding out of an enviable church history.

St. Stephen's was crowded at the two special services yesterday. In the morning there were addresses by Bishop Potter, the Rev. Mr. Seagle, Dr. Strong, and the Rev. Dr. Perkins, formerly rector of the Church of the Incarnation, in Thirty-first Street, between Second and Third Avenues. The Rev. Dr. Ullman participated in the service. In the evening the Rev. Dr. George Francis Nelson, Archdeacon of New York, preached.

Dr. Strong spoke of the mutual desire of himself and the Rev. Dr. Seagle for harmony and neighborliness between themselves, their congregations, and their churches. He pledged himself and his church to plan and work with St. Stephen's in mutual trust and harmony and for the common welfare of the community.

The Rev. Mr. Seagle said that St. Stephen's reciprocated all the sentiments uttered and pledged himself to see that they were put in practice.

LONG CHASE FOR COINERS.

Secret Service Agent Gets Three Prisoners After Weary Pursuit.

PORTSMOUTH, Va., May 7.—After a chase that led through several Atlantic Coast cities, Secret Service Officer T. E. Land of Boston to-day arrested three men, who said they were Thomas Brewster, Charles Fairbanks, and Robert Black, all of San Francisco, charged with extensive counterfeiting operations.

The trio were located in Key West, Fla., but they succeeded in eluding arrest until they reached here. Land followed the accused men all the way up the Atlantic Coast, visiting Charleston, S. C.; Savannah, Ga., and Wilmington, N. C. It is said that large quantities of bogus money have been circulated in all the cities through which the men passed.

With the prisoners the Secret Service officer captured $9,000 in counterfeit twenty-dollar bills. Land said to-day that he discovered that a large number of spurious bills were made in Buffalo, which was the distributing point of a gang.

MURDER VICTIM IDENTIFIED.

Mother Says Body Found on Colorado Mountain Is Bessie Bouton's.

COLORADO SPRINGS, Col., May 7.—Mrs. Meda Kempter, wife of Richard Kempter of Syracuse, N. Y., has identified the body of a woman found on Cutler Mountain as that of her daughter, Bessie Bouton, and has started with the body for New York. The identification was made complete by the dental work on the teeth and by a scar on the right side of the left forefinger, as well as by the hair.

The mother charged that a man named Andrews had attempted to kill the girl with poison while she was on the Pacific Coast.

The body of Bessie Bouton was found on Cutler Mountain, south of Colorado Springs, on Dec. 17, 1904. The woman had been shot in the head, after which gasoline had been poured over the body and lighted.

TRAVELER DEAD, MONEY GONE

Body of Joseph Haddah of New York Found in Connecticut Woods.

WATERBURY, Conn., May 7.—The body of Joseph Haddah, thirty-one years old, a commercial traveler, was found to-day in the woods near Forest Park Pond, a revolver by his side and a bullet hole in his head.

WOULD SPLIT PENNSYLVANIA.

Ex-Gov. Stone Favors Two States—Objects to Philadelphia Bossism.

Special to The New York Times.

PITTSBURG, May 7.—Ex-Gov. William A. Stone of Pennsylvania to-day gave out a signed communication in favor of dividing Pennsylvania into two States. The project has been agitated for some time.

The Governor shows how the State could be divided with what he thinks advantage to both sides of the line, and dwells at length on the actions of Philadelphia politicians, who have made the members from the country districts angry at Harrisburg. He says that since the time of Senator Quay no one has been found who could hold Philadelphia in check.

KILLS BOARD OF TRADE BILL.

Illinois Assembly in Uproar at Session Lasting Into Sunday.

SPRINGFIELD, Ill., May 7.—The Board of Trade bill was killed in the Assembly at the close of a protracted session, which lasted until early this morning, by 73 yeas to 63 nays. The bill was framed to legalize transactions of the Chicago Board of Trade and put an end to bucket shops.

Exciting scenes marked the defeat of the bill. Part of the time the Speaker vainly rapped for order. A number of lobbyists in behalf of the bill, who had crowded into the Chamber, were ejected from the floor by the Sergeant at Arms.

SCHLEY MAKES BOW TO PARK THOUSANDS

Record-Breaking Crowd Basks in the Sun.

150,000 AT CONEY ISLAND

Pickpockets Spoil Day for Many—Yacht Capsizes, but Eight Aboard Are Picked Up by Another Boat.

It was Summer, not Spring, with the crowds in Central Park yesterday. There were the green carpet of grass underfoot and the warm-weather waists, the delicate tracery of green leaves overhead, and the carriages, baby and otherwise. The genial sun, the lace parasols, and the lawn dresses, the gentle breezes, and the barelegged children, the petulant, perspiring policemen, and the benches with not a vacant seat, all made the season seem more advanced. The walks and driveways were but streams of humanity, horseflesh, traps, and autos.

Sergt. Arneth, at the desk in the Arsenal Police Station, said that the crowd which thronged the Park was the largest on record.

"There may be bigger crowds than this before the Summer is over," he vouchsafed, "but I've never seen such a crush in the past."

Long before church time the Park was well filled. By noon there were more people within its borders than on any previous Sunday of the year, and in the height of the afternoon outpouring there was hardly room to turn around on any of the popular walks.

The swans on the lake, their man-supplied motive power well wearied before the day was half over, took in tolls without halting a single minute. The peanut vendors were sold out, and the animals with a taste for such wares were surfeited early in the day.

And with all the crowds and all the influx of pleasure traps and autos there was not an accident worthy of note, or a discordant happening worth particular mention. Not a single baby was lost, and there was not a runaway or collision.

It is true that young Patsy Cline, aged eight, of 35 West Forty-fifth Street, ran down the hill opposite Bridge 25 at such a speed that he couldn't come to a halt at the bottom, where he was received with open arms by a barbed wire fence. Some minor cuts resulted, but Ambulance Surgeon Goldsmith sewed them up, and Patsy was as good as new.

It is true that Otto Alter, all the way from Brooklyn, didn't know that it was against the rules to pick the flowers, and when he gathered a bunch of lilacs he himself was gathered in by a watchful blue-coat. But Sergt. Arneth said that as soon as the Judge learned where Oscar hailed from he would be turned loose.

"These were only trivialties," said Sergt. Arneth. "The police had no trouble at all. Central Park's the only place on earth where so many people would have caused so little disorder."

Coney Island was the Mecca yesterday for 150,000 pilgrims. The great majority were well behaved, but some trouble was caused by pickpockets. Many persons appeared at the police station to complain of lost pocketbooks and valuables.

During the day the police arrested several men and boys believed to be pickpockets, and held most of them on charges of vagrancy. In one batch of the arrested were twelve boys who gave Manhattan east side addresses. Nothing was found on them to justify their being detained. Other arrests were for minor offenses. A lot of lost children also were gathered in.

One of the incidents of the day was the capsizing of a sloop yacht at the foot of the Boulevard, and the accident was witnessed by thousands of people on the beach. Eight men were on the boat at the time. Six escaped in the sloop's boat, while the other two clung to the mast. In a few minutes another yacht came along and rescued all eight and kept on with them.

NAN PATTERSON HAS VISITOR.

O'Reilly Vouches for Stranger—Plans for Her Freedom.

Nan Patterson received a visitor in the Tombs late yesterday afternoon. The visitor called once and permission to enter was refused. He sent a note to the former chorus girl, who called for a messenger and dispatched a telegram to Lawyer Dan O'Reilly. The visitor returned to the Tombs just before 4 o'clock with Mr. O'Reilly.

The lawyer showed a paper to the keeper at the gate and the stranger was promptly admitted. The two were in the prison for more than an hour. When Mr. O'Reilly later was asked who the man was he said:

"I won't deny that he holds a Government position and lives in Washington." Mr. O'Reilly further said the visitor was a relative, who came to assure the woman that he was ready and eager to supply bail "in any reasonable amount," and to offer to provide for her for the first few months in case she should be released from prison this week.

Mr. O'Reilly said that he and Abraham Levy would call on District Attorney Jerome this morning, and make a formal request that Miss Patterson be discharged from custody on her own recognizance, in the event of a refusal he said that Mr. Jerome would be asked to fix bail in a nominal sum. Should he refuse to fix bail Mr. O'Reilly said that an immediate application for a writ of habeas corpus would be made. The paper had already been prepared. This proceeding, he said, would bring the woman into court again not later than Wednesday.

STUDENTS UPSET IN LAKE.

Eight Cornell Men Have Narrow Escape from Drowning.

ITHACA, N. Y., May 7.—Eight Cornell students had a narrow escape from drowning in Cayuga Lake to-day. They were sailing close reefed in a thirty-mile wind, when their boat capsized in the middle of the lake.

For forty-five minutes they clung to the overturned craft, awaiting the rescuing party, which put out in rowboats. After great difficulty the students were taken ashore, nearly exhausted.

BOSTOCK'S ANIMALS ON WAY.

Bonavita, Who Lost an Arm, Will Again Appear.

Bostock's trained animal show will arrive in this country to-day on the Atlantic Transport liner Minneapolis.

Bostock's amphitheatre at Coney Island has been improved and nearly doubled in size. Bostock himself will not get here until Wednesday.

Bonavita, who lost an arm by a lion's attack last Summer, will accompany the animals. He will appear again with Baltimore, the lion that maimed him.

Mme. Morelli, and her leopards will again be part of the exhibit. Selika will do her dance with the lions.

BIG TOWN ON ICEBERG.

Hank, Able Seaman, Grounds His Ship He Saw the Houses.

The British bark Vendita, which reached port from Dunkirk yesterday morning, and tied up in Newtown Creek, brought to port an iceberg story, fantastic, but doubtlessly true, because three of the bark's able-bodied seamen vouch for it.

"It was just this way," said Bill, and Hank and Jim agreed throughout by nods of the head. "We were sailing along peaceful like, and all except the mate, the look-out, and the man at the wheel was below snoring, when all of a sudden the look-out yelled out 'Iceberg on the port bow!' The man at the wheel went the other way, but he had no more'n straightened out again when the look-out yelled 'Iceberg on the starboard bow!'

"It was then about two bells of the morning Wednesday a week ago, and from that hour on clear to three bells in the evenin' it was iceberg on the bow, port, starboard, and both, and iceberg for'ad and iceberg everywhere else you could think of. When at last we got clear of the freezers we had been turning around so much that three of the fellows was dizzy drunk."

"That same night," broke in Hank, "we sighted one tremendous berg, that must have been a mile long and half a mile high. It was full of holes and ditches, and the wind whistling through them made the saddest sound you ever heard. The moon was shining right on the thing, and if there wasn't a big town, with churches, theatres, houses, and factories scattered all about I'm a liar."

"That's all," said Jim.

Humane Society Protests Against Treatment of the Sailors.

GALVESTON, May 7.—The Galveston Humane Society has sent a communication to Secretary of the Navy Morton protesting against the treatment of men on the cruiser Galveston while in this port by Capt. Cutler.

No specific charges are made, but it is said they will be if asked for by the department.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, May 7.—The protest said to have been forwarded to the Secretary of the Navy by the Humane Society of Galveston, Texas, against alleged cruel treatment of the enlisted men of that vessel, has not been received at the Navy Department.

No complaints have reached the department from any of the crew of the Galveston, who number 300 men. Under naval regulations any enlisted man may lodge complaints with the commanding officer of his vessel of bad treatment, and if redress is not given appeal may be made direct to the Secretary of the Navy.

Capt. Cutler has an excellent record, and the stories recently published of alleged cruelty on the Galveston are discredited at the department.

MADMAN LEAPED FROM TRAIN.

Kolbe Was on Way to Asylum at White Plains.

Frederick Kolbe, formerly a plumber, who lived with his brother James at 103 Commonwealth Avenue, the Bronx, was taken to the psychopathic ward at Bellevue last night, and will be transferred later to Bloomingdale Asylum. He was being taken there three days ago, when he escaped from his attendant.

Kolbe was pronounced insane three months ago, and was transferred to the Manhattan Hospital on Ward's Island. Three days ago, his brother James obtained papers for his transfer to the Bloomingdale Asylum, and an attendant was sent to take him there.

While on the railroad train, Kolbe escaped from his nurse, and as the train slowed up for a station, jumped and ran. The nurse tried in vain to find him.

Kolbe called yesterday afternoon at the home of his brother, and a messenger was sent for a policeman. When Kolbe saw that he was to be made a prisoner he fought desperately. Several men overpowered him.

BAY STATE FORESTS ABLAZE.

Settlement Near Plymouth in Great Danger—Fire Gangs at Work.

PLYMOUTH, Mass., May 7.—The forest fire which started last Friday near Darby station, on the Middleborough and Plymouth Branch of the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad, burst out afresh to-day. Fanned by a strong southwest wind, it swept onward toward the little settlement of Rocky Nook, in the town of Kingston.

The settlement was saved for the time being by a sudden shift of the wind to the northeast. Late to-night the flames were beyond control of the fire fighters, and the settlement again was in danger.

The breast of the fire is ten miles wide. Probably fifty square miles had been burned over to-night. All the men of Kingston and Plymouth have turned out to fight the flames, and a large force of men has been brought to the scene by the railroad. Immense tracts of pine and birch have been destroyed.

The fire is the worst that has visited this section. The head of flame last night was at Little Smelt Pond, ten miles from where it started on Friday. With a constantly expanding front it was driven northeasterly for three or four miles in the direction of Rocky Nook. Between Little Smelt Pond and Rocky Nook the country is elevated, there are no ponds or swamps, and only small streams.

The section is covered with a virgin growth. Some of the white pine and beech are of great size, their straight trunks, two feet in diameter near the ground, tapering high. This is the most valuable timber in Plymouth County.

AUTO CAUSED HIS DEATH.

G. E. Allen's Carriage Overturned When Frightened Horse Bolted.

BINGHAMTON, N. Y., May 7.—George E. Allen, a general sewing machine agent, fifty-five years old, was instantly killed at Hooper, six miles west of this city, this afternoon, when his carriage was tipped over.

He was on his way to Owego, when his horse was frightened by the automobile of George F. Johnson, manager of the Lestershire shoe factory, driven by Bert Baldwin. The animal jumped to one side, the carriage was overturned, and Mr. Allen's skull was crushed against the electric car rail.

Dead Boy Was Robert A. McCabe.

The body of the young man killed by a Brighton Beach train Saturday afternoon was identified yesterday afternoon at the Brooklyn Morgue by his brother as that of Robert A. McCabe, nineteen years old, who lived with his parents at 405 Herkimer Street, Brooklyn. The young man was a member of the White Star Baseball Club. He was a little late getting to Prospect Park, where the nine was to play, and found a substitute in his place. He was killed on the way home.

CARDINAL GIBBONS URGES CHURCH UNITY

Would Weld All Christian Denominations Into One Body.

SAVIOUR SPOKE OF "CHURCH"

Cardinal Says Only in the Catholic Church Can the Essential of Unity Be Found.

Special to The New York Times.

BALTIMORE, May 7.—Cardinal Gibbons preached at the cathedral to-day on the "Unity of the Church."

"By unity," he said, "is meant that the members of the true Church must be united in the belief of the same doctrine of revelation and in the acknowledgment of the authority of the same pastors. Heresy and schism are opposed to Christian unity. Unity of government is not less essential to the Church of Christ than unity of doctrine.

"Our Divine Saviour never speaks of his churches, but of his Church. He does not say: 'Upon this rock I will build my churches,' but, 'Upon this rock I will build my Church,' from which words we must conclude that it never was His intention to establish or sanction various conflicting denominations, but one corporate body, with all the members united under one visible head. In fact, our common sense alone, apart from revelation, is sufficient to convince us that God could not be the author of various opposing systems of religion.

"Where shall we find this essential unity of faith and government? I answer confidently nowhere, save in the Catholic Church. The number of Catholics in the world is 225,000,000. May the day be hastened when all who profess the Christian name will unite under the same leader, and profess the same faith, so that the word of Christ may be fulfilled, 'There shall be one fold and one Shepherd.'"

DR. TUPPER MAY ACCEPT CALL

$10,000 Salary Offered Him by Madison Avenue Baptist Church.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, May 7.—The Rev. Dr. Kerr Boyce Tupper, pastor of the First Baptist Church, will, his congregation believes, accept the call to the Madison Avenue Church of New York. The New York church offers him a salary of $10,000 a year and the First Baptist Church pays him $6,000.

The congregation had planned to hold a mass meeting to beg Dr. Tupper to remain, but speaking from the pulpit this morning he asked the members to refrain from this.

"This question of your pastor going or of his staying," he said, "must be left to his own heart in communion with God to decide. Only pray that the Divine will may be clearly revealed, and then heroically followed, all irrespective of your and my personal preferences. It is my purpose to visit the Madison Avenue Church at some early date and then speedily announce a final decision."

The Kind You Have Always Bought

Harper's Book News.

The Marriage of William Ashe is Mrs. Humphry Ward's best novel—a bigger, deeper, more absorbing story than her Lady Rose's Daughter. The heroine is perhaps the most fascinating woman ever put into a book. She does wrong, but her wrong-doing seems almost moral. The praise of the critics sounds almost extravagant, but readers say it seems deserved.

"It is a work of heroic mold compared with the puny things of the day. One receives it with the deference and thankfulness that used to go out to the novels of Thackeray and Dickens, with whom Mrs. Ward is fast ranging herself."—Springfield Democrat.

"A masterpiece of modern English literature—a great, strong, masterful story, intensely human in its characters and intensely throbbing with life in its action."—Boston Journal.

"It is a story which cannot be laid down lightly and forgotten, as has been already evidenced by the tremendous interest it has created. It is the great book of the season."—Newport News.

The Second Wooing of Salina Sue

The New York Sun says: "Mrs. Ruth McEnery Stuart has here done her very best work. The title story is a masterpiece. Light in touch, it shows the negro character through and through, and the other stories in the volume are as good studies in black psychology as they are dramatic and telling tales."

(E) Trade Mark:

No. 31,390, registered March 8th, 1898. The trade-mark registered includes the letter A inclosed in a circle, as applied to cylindrical cotton bales.

(F) 1. All additional shares of the capital stock of the corporations named in subdivision (A) hereof and all shares of other corporations organized after April 1, 1902, acquired by American Cotton Company subsequent to said last-mentioned date.

2. All additional letters patent, applications for letters patent, designs and trade-marks, and all other property of every kind and description acquired by the American Cotton Company with the proceeds of the said debenture bonds.

3. All other chattels and personal property of said American Cotton Company appertaining to or forming a part of its business, excepting merchandise, accounts receivable and cash.

The said property will be sold as an entirety and in one lot or parcel, without covenant or warranty of any kind, nature, or description whatsoever.

All the right, title, and interest of the Central Trust Company of New York, as Trustee, in and to the above-mentioned several Letters Patent of Mexico, Brazil, Egypt, India, Russia, and Turkey is to be sold upon conditions as follows:

First: The sale and conveyance thereof are to be subject to all Government taxes and annuities which are now payable thereon, and shall hereafter become payable upon said several Letters Patent of Mexico, Brazil, Egypt, India, Russia, and Turkey, or upon any of them.

Second: All notarial fees, Government taxes, and annuities and other expenses required to be paid for assigning and conveying all the right, title, and interest of the Central Trust Company of New York, as Trustee, in and to the above-mentioned Letters Patent in the above countries to the purchaser or purchasers thereof shall be paid by the purchaser or purchasers thereof.

Third: If any of said several Letters Patent of Mexico, Brazil, Egypt, India, Russia, and Turkey shall have lapsed or become forfeited for non-payment of any taxes or annuity or by reason of failure to work the same, as hereinbefore covered thereby, no deduction or abatement shall be allowed from the amount of the bid of the successful bidder for all the right, title, and interest of the Central Trust Company of New York, as Trustee, in and to all of said Letters Patent of foreign countries.

No bid will be received from any person who shall not first deposit with the undersigned or the aforesaid auctioneers as a pledge that he will make good the bid in case of the acceptance the sum of $10,000 in cash or by certified check on some incorporated bank or trust company of the City of New York, made or indorsed payable to the order of the Central Trust Company of New York. The deposit received from any unsuccessful bidder will be returned to him, whereupon his property shall be struck off. The deposit received from the successful bidder will be retained as part payment of the purchase price of the property so struck off to him, but the said successful bidder shall forthwith enter into an agreement in writing in appropriate form, wherein he shall bind himself to the acceptance of his bid at the office of the Central Trust Company of New York City, No. 54 Wall Street, New York City, on or before the 29th day of May, 1905.

The successful bidder, upon payment in full of the purchase price bidden in the manner and within the period herein limited, shall be entitled to receive the certificates representing the shares of stock enumerated in subdivision (A) hereof, together with transfers thereof executed by the persons in whose names said certificates stand, and an instrument or instruments in writing executed by the Central Trust Company of New York, as Trustee, with said transferring or purporting to transfer such right, title, and interest as it may have as such Trustee of, in, and to the property (other than that set forth in subdivision (A) hereof,) together with such documents as may be in the possession of the Trustee (other than the original deed of trust securing said debentures) evidencing its right, title, and interest to such property or to any part or portion thereof.

Intending bidders during business hours of any day (Sundays and legal holidays excepted) prior to the sale of said property pursuant to this notice, at the office of the Central Trust Company of New York, 54 Wall Street, New York City, may examine any and all documents in the possession of said Trust Company evidencing its right, title, and interest to the property to be sold or to any part or portion thereof.

In case any bidder shall fail to make good his bid upon its acceptance by the said auctioneers, or shall fail after such acceptance to comply with the terms thereof, or shall fail to pay the balance of the purchase price, then the sum deposited by such bidder, whether paid in cash or represented by check, shall be forfeited as a penalty for such failure, and such bidder shall be held responsible for the payment of the expenses of the sale or of a resale, and for any deficiency or loss in case the property shall be sold at a less price at such re-sale.

So much of the purchase price as shall not be required by the undersigned Trustee to be paid in cash can either be paid in cash or the purchaser may satisfy and make good such residue of his bid in whole or in part by turning in to be canceled or credited the six per cent. gold debenture bonds and the coupons thereto appertaining of the American Cotton Company outstanding under said deed of trust dated April 1, 1902, and the purchaser will be credited on account of such bonds and coupons with such sums as would be payable in cash on account thereof out of the proceeds of sale if the whole amount of the purchase price were paid in cash.

The right is reserved to re-sell the property upon such notice as the Central Trust Company of New York may determine as sufficient, or without notice in the event that the purchaser shall fail or omit to make any payment on account of the unpaid balance of the purchase price on or before the 29th day of May, 1905.

The Central Trust Company of New York reserves the right to adjourn said sale from time to time, and to sell upon such adjourned day without further notice or upon such notice as it may in its discretion deem sufficient.

Chicago, May 2, 1905.

To the Stockholders of the CHICAGO AND NORTH-WESTERN RAILWAY COMPANY.

At a meeting of the Board of Directors held on the second day of May, 1905, the following preamble and resolutions were adopted:

Whereas, The Stockholders of this Company at a Special Meeting called for that purpose and held on the tenth day of February, 1903, adopted resolutions increasing the Capital Stock of this Company by an amount of common stock sufficient to make the aggregate Capital Stock $100,000,000, and authorizing the Board of Directors to issue such common stock from time to time and in such amounts, within the total authorized Capital Stock, as such Board of Directors might determine, and for any purpose allowed by law; and

Resolved, That to obtain funds to improve and extend the Company's property and to provide additional equipment, as well as for other proper corporate purposes, there be issued an additional amount of common stock equal to fifteen per cent. of the total preferred and common shares now outstanding;

Resolved, That all stockholders of the Company shall be entitled to subscribe to such additional stock at the rate of $100 per share, to the amount of 15% of their respective holdings, as shown upon the stock books at the close of business on Thursday, the first day of June, 1905 and that the right to such subscription shall terminate with Saturday, the first day of July, 1905.

MEETINGS AND ELECTIONS.

THE ANNUAL MEETING OF THE STOCKholders of G. W. Dillingham Company of New York for the election of Directors for the ensuing

THE FINANCIAL MARKETS

Preponderance of Advances in Last Week's Market.

Highly Irregular Movements Ending in Most Cases Favorably—Abundance of Funds Wherewith to Purchase Stocks.

Liquidation in the stock market last week was so counterbalanced by the support that was accorded from various sources that the course of the market, although extremely irregular, led to more gains than losses. Changes of a point or more were recorded in 121 stocks, and of these seventy-one advanced and fifty declined. The movement in bonds was narrower, only thirty-one changing a point, eighteen advancing and thirteen declining. The market grew dull as the week advanced and the bulk of the trading was supplied by relatively few issues. The dozen most active issues showed a total of 4,125,895 shares, out of trading in all issues amounting to 6,193,932 shares, and Union Pacific and Reading together showed 1,600,000 shares. Of these twelve stocks eight showed gains, which indicated that activity was not confined to the stocks that the bears attacked with most success. The gain of 3¾ points in Reading common despite the announcement that a large block of the stock had been sold by the Lake Shore and Baltimore and Ohio Roads, news that was calculated to decrease speculative enthusiasm for the stock, showed considerable power of resistance in the market. Union Pacific, which for a long time has been the keynote of the market, led the entire list in activity and at the close of the week, after numerous fluctuations, showed a gain of an even point. On the curb Northern Securities, with the fortunes of which Union Pacific is necessarily closely allied, made a gain of 7½ points, and Northern Pacific rose 16¼ points. The last named was the largest of the net changes. The numerous issues which fluctuate not by fractions nor by points, but by five or ten points, were not prominent in last week's trading. The contest in the market was apparently confined to other issues, and they neither suffered nor profited very much by the changes that occurred in the more active stocks.

Rates for money remained easy all week and are likely to remain easy while liquidation continues in the stock market. The more plentiful the supply of money the more readily the stocks liquidated will be absorbed, and present indications are that no one need be deterred from making purchases in the stock market for lack of funds with which to finance their purchases.

BUSINESS IN ENGLAND.

Immediate Future In Some Trades is Viewed with Anxiety.

LONDON, May 7.—The Times in its financial supplement to-morrow will say:

"Some reports of trade conditions are more cheerful, but they are rather full of hope than a record of results actually secured. Here and there previous gains are barely held and the immediate future is viewed with some anxiety.

"Speculation is again responsible for new price records for the year in sugar, iron, and copper.

"In the grain market quiet conditions generally have prevailed, without important price changes. The upward movement in seeds and seed oils has been checked, lower prices being recorded.

"In the cotton trade the raw material has been quiet, but prices are higher. In yarns fair business has been negotiated. Goods continue in request both for the East and for other outlets, but business is sometimes made difficult by high prices.

"At the third series of colonial wool sales in the past week in London competition was active and prices advanced 10 to 20 per cent. In manufactured woolens business is gradually improving and low-grade goods are active in some markets.

"Speculation has carried the price of Cleveland pig iron to the highest point touched in five years and to the unique position of being higher than Scotch pig. Legitimate business is hand-to-mouth. Finished products show little change.

"It is reported from Newcastle that certain shipowners are endeavoring to cancel shipbuilding orders previously placed by them.

"Birmingham reports efforts to effect a combination of metallic bedstead manufacturers."

Sheepshead Bay Club's Games.

The Sheepshead Bay Athletic Club held yesterday on its grounds its annual Spring games. Three events were decided in contest beside the exhibition events. Incompetition S. Tombs carried off first honors. All were handicaps, resulting as follows:

75-Yard Dash.—Won by S. Tombs. (6 feet;) A. Loessing, (scratch,) second; A. Van Nostrand, (6 feet,) third. Time—0:08 4-5.

Running High Jump.—Won by Leo Loesing, (scratch,) height 4 feet 8 inches; P. Correll, (3 inches,) second, with 4 feet 8 inches; S. Tombs, (4 inches,) third, with 4 feet 2 inches.

Throwing the Discus.—Won by S. Tombs, (6 feet,) distance 70 feet 8 inches; T. Curry, (6 feet,) second, with 68 feet 7 inches; H. Biel, (4 feet,) third, with 64 feet 7 inch.

AUTOS START TO-DAY FOR PACIFIC COAST

Two Runabouts Expect to Reach Portland in Forty-four Days.

IN INTEREST OF GOOD ROADS

Special Agent from Department of Agriculture Will Accompany Tourists—Route to be Followed.

A transcontinental automobile run over a new route will start at 9 o'clock this morning from this city. Two light runabout cars of seven horse power each will attempt to cross the country to Portland, Oregon. They are due to arrive there by June 21, when the convention of the National Good Roads Association will open. This convention will continue through June 24. It is one of the special features arranged in connection with the Lewis and Clark Exposition, which will open June 1, and prominent automobilists from all parts of the country have been invited to attend and discuss questions pertaining to local and National good roads.

The drivers of the cars that will start this morning will be Percy Magargle and Dwight W. Huss. Each will take one assistant. Barton Stanchfield will go with Magargle, while Milford Wiegle will accompany Huss. The cars will keep together as much as possible, but this is not necessary, as in case of accident to one the other will push on.

The transcontinental tourists are to remain with their cars throughout the entire trip. One man will not go on ahead by rail, picking up the car at some future point. If the men wish to sleep in a more comfortable bed than can be afforded by the light runabouts, they must do so at their own loss of time.

In about 3,500 miles will be covered on the trip. The route to be followed is along the pathway of the New York Central Railroad to Chicago, then the Rock Island route to Omaha, then the Union Pacific. When the Cascade Mountains are reached the hardships of the trip will come, for besides crossing the mountains an arid desert must be passed over.

For the purpose of securing data regarding the condition of the roads from New York to Portland, Special Agent James W. Abbott of the Department of Agriculture will follow the tourists by rail, stopping at various places along the route and compiling his report from their experiences.

Mr. Abbott will present the result of these investigations before the Good Roads Convention in Portland. He has been in the city several days working up interest in the good roads movement, and he believes that the transcontinental tour will do a great deal toward securing better roads for many of the Western States.

"The automobile interest is only beginning in the far West," said Mr. Abbott last Saturday, while he was watching the racing at Brighton Beach. "In California there are many active automobile centres, but in the far Northwest the number of machines is yet very few. The good roads movement is absolutely necessary to make the automobile more popular, and if the two cars now starting succeed in making the trip on time, which will be within forty-four days, I think it will pave the way for future trips across the continent by many private motor car owners who will undertake the journey, perhaps, more leisurely, for pleasure."

STRAIGHT COURSE TO BE USED FOR FEWER RACES

Belmont Park Stewards Order Change to the Main Track.

CONCESSION TO THE PUBLIC

Three Days of Meeting Have Turned Form Upside Down—Stake Events of the Week.

One more concession to public opinion has been decided on by the officials of the Westchester Racing Association in the announcement made by H. G. Crickmore, clerk of the Belmont Park course, yesterday, that on and after to-morrow all races at six and a half furlongs and over, for three-year-olds and upward, will be run over the main or circular course. One exception is made in the case of a race which originally was on the programme to be run at a mile and a furlong over the main course, but which by special order of the Stewards will be run as a test of the Belmont Stakes course, as the last event of Wednesday, when the start will be made in the back stretch of the mile training track, the race to finish at the regular winning post, thus giving a mile and a furlong run with one turn and a bend into the stretch for the run home.

The new ruling will reduce somewhat the number of races run over the straight, but even under the change ordered there will be three or more each day run down the straight, the great majority of these, however, being races for two-year-olds. The experience of the three days of racing held on the new course has been much more satisfactory to the horsemen than to the general public. The objections that the patrons of the track have made to the straight runs have been altogether because of the fact that so very little of the races could be seen from any of the public inclosures.

The horsemen, however, have found compensation for the limitations put on their view of the races in the fact that the wide stretch and long straight course added much to the safety of the horses, and, in theory at least, contributed to true results. The facts that only four actual favorites have won in three days, however, and that in most of the races run down the straights there has been swerving and jostling, even since the obliteration of the "path," have served to make even the horsemen doubtful, and Belmont Park still is something of a puzzle to the trainers and owners.

Horses that took naturally to the down hill run of the Eclipse Course, at Morris Park so far have run far away from their old form on the soft track and almost dead level of the Belmont Park straight, and it begins to look as if the betting men and form followers will have to invent new ideas to cover the changed conditions that are met with at the big track on Long Island.

The meeting at Belmont Park is to last three weeks, and already some of the betting men have begun to look ahead and wonder what new complications will be presented when the scene of the racing moves on to the mile oval of the Gravesend track, with its short turns, and a change back to the older style of racing with the turns to the left.

The most important stakes of the week, though stakes are set for decision every day, will be run Saturday, when three attractions are to be offered in the Withers, one mile for three-year-olds, the Whitney Memorial Steeplechase, over the two-mile-and-a-half course, and the Fashion Stakes, for sand a half furlongs, for two-year-olds. The Withers, which will be worth nearly $9,000 gross, has an eligible list of twenty-one horses, most prominent of which is James R. Keene's English-bred colt Sysonby, which divided the honors of the Metropolitan Handicap with Race King after the memorable dead heat of Thursday.

MURPHY FOR CHEAP GAS, HE SAYS BY TELEPHONE

Expresses Deep Disappointment at Votes of Tammany Senators.

IS NOW AT MT. CLEMENS, MICH

Rumors of Punishment Because of Failure of 80-Cent Bill Find Some Believers.

Threats of punishment for the five Tammany Senators who voted against the passage of the eighty-cent gas bill were heard in Tammany circles yesterday, and those who took the report seriously were further impressed last night when it became known that Charles F. Murphy had telephoned to New York from Mount Clemens, Mich. Mr. Murphy said by telephone that he had informed all the Tammany Senators that the organization was for cheap gas, and that they were expected to vote for the cheapest gas bill presented to them for action.

The Senators allied with Tammany who voted against the measures were Martin, Fitzgerald, Foley, Riordan, and Hawkins, while four Tammany Senators—Grady, Marks, Frawley, and Dooling—voted for the eighty-cent gas bill on its final passage. According to a statement which found some believers in Tammany Hall, Mr. Murphy thinks that the five Senators who voted contrary to his instructions acted in a manner to discredit the organization, and he is determined that they shall not be renominated.

Mr. Murphy was so much disturbed by published reports that he had purposely divided the Tammany delegation that he telephoned last night to Thomas F. Smith, secretary of Tammany Hall, and authorized him to make public an interview explaining his position. Mr. Murphy was at Good Ground all week up to Saturday morning, when he left for Mount Clemens.

"I wish to deny absolutely," said Mr. Murphy over the telephone, "the report that I instructed the Tammany Senators to divide their votes on the passage of the cheap gas bill. In all my conversations with Senator Grady as minority leader of the Senate, as well as in my conversations with other Tammany Senators, I have repeatedly stated that Tammany was in favor of a cheap gas bill, a bill putting the price down as low as possible, and that the organization expected every Tammany Senator and every Tammany Assemblyman to cast his vote in favor of such measure.

"On Monday of last week I had a long talk with Senator Grady, and then I impressed my views very firmly upon him, and told him to pass the word along to the other Tammany Senators and Assemblymen. He did so. On Thursday morning while I was at Good Ground I telephoned to Senator Grady at Albany and further urged that the Tammany men should stand solidly for the cheaper gas bill. The night before that several of the Tammany legislators called me on the telephone to get my views of the situation and to every one of them I said that we were for cheap gas and that we expected them to vote for the measures.

"Although deeply disappointed at the failure to pass the cheap gas bill I did not intend to say anything on the subject until I saw the printed statement that I had ordered the Tammany delegation in the Senate to divide its vote. That report I brand as unqualifiedly false."

From inner organization circles came the statement last night that Mayor McClellan had from the first insisted on having Murphy take the stand for a cheap gas as an absolute necessity at a time when a municipal campaign is at hand. It also was said that the Mayor would insist on having the Tammany Senators who voted against the bill punished for their action.

Leader Murphy will be in New York Thursday evening, when the Tammany Society is to meet and install its officers for the coming year, and when the Council of Sachems is to elect a Grand Sachem. It was said last night that Justice James A. O'Gorman, the present Grand Sachem, would continue in office in spite of his desire to lay down the duties of the office after three years' incumbency.

EARL A STAMP COLLECTOR.

Owner of Yacht Valhalla an Enthusiastic Philatelist.

The Earl of Crawford, whose shiprigged yacht Valhalla is here to take part in the ocean race for the Kaiser's Cup, starting from Sandy Hook on May 16, is perhaps better known as a stamp collector in this country than as a yachtsman. The Collectors' Club has appointed a Reception Committee to call upon him, and a number of entertainments are to be held in his honor.

The Earl's collection is valued at more than $500,000. Among philatelists he is known as a specialist, that is, he confines himself to the collection of certain lines.

His collection of United States issues is said to be the best in the world. He possesses a specimen of every stamp that has been issued in this country. Among them is the famous Baltimore Postmaster stamp, valued at $4,400; the St. Louis 5, 10, and 20 cent bear stamps, each worth from $200 to $3,000; the square New Haven stamp, with the signature of Postmaster E. H. Mitchell, valued at $3,500, and the Brattleborough Postmaster stamp, which is worth $650. His collection of Confederate provisional stamps is also practically complete, and includes such rarities as the issues of Aberdeen, Miss.; Atlanta and Columbus, Ga.; Antauguaville, Greenville, and Bridgeville, Ala.; Beaumont, Texas, and Danville and Emory, Va., all worth from $300 to $2,000 apiece.

Another of his specialties is the issue of Sydney view stamps, which were engraved on wood blocks. Of this series there are more than 200 varieties, every one of which is embraced in the Earl's collection, in both used and unused condition. This series alone is valued at over $10,000. The Earl also has a pair of the rare Mauritius one-penny and two-penny 1847 stamps, worth $7,000.

King Edward is the owner of the best stamp collection in England, with that of the Earl a close second.

The Earl is the Vice President of the London Philatelic Society, of which body King Edward is Honorary President.

BOY HEADS THIS FAMILY.

Six Children Aided by Neighbors, but Have Hard Fight.

On the ground floor of the tenement at 62 Columbia Street is a family of six children, the oldest thirteen years old. Their father disappeared more than a year ago, and their mother, Mrs. Annie Berman, has been lying helpless in the Mount Sinai Hospital for seven weeks. The youngest child is barely a year old.

For some time the little brood managed to get along by themselves, letting nobody know their trouble. But when rent day arrived they had to appeal to the other tenement dwellers in No. 62.

No one in the neighborhood is very prosperous, and they have their own troubles when rent day draws near. But somehow they managed to scrape together enough to keep the little ones from being turned into the street. A benevolent society on the east side was notified, and it has been doing something for them.

Harry, the oldest boy, cannot earn much, as the time got taken up by his household duties, but he does the best he can.

GOLD MEDAL FOR POLICEMAN.

East Side to Decorate Dewan for Bravery at Fire.

In recognition of the heroic work of Policeman John J. Dewan at the Allen Street fire several weeks ago, business men of the east side have decided to give him a gold medal. Dewan is at his home with a broken arm, but as soon as he gets out there will be a great celebration.

Dewan is attached to the Eldridge Street Station. On the night of the fire he rescued twenty people from burning to death. While he was bringing out a girl he fell down and broke his arm.

East side residents held a largely attended meeting yesterday, of which Morris Grabhard was Chairman. They already have sent a letter to Police Commissioner Meadoo acquainting him with their purpose and asking for his official sanction for the reception and presentation of the medal.

CHURCH CORNERSTONE LAID.

Archbishop Farley Officiates at Ceremonies at St. Monica's.

The cornerstone of the new Roman Catholic Church of St. Monica, Seventy-ninth Street, near First Avenue, was laid yesterday afternoon in the presence of an immense throng. The houses in the neighborhood were decorated with flags and bunting in honor of the event.

The new church is being built around and above the edifice in which the people have been worshipping, and the ceremonies were conducted upon the roof of the old church.

Archbishop Farley officiated. He was assisted by the Rev. Father McKinnon, S. J., pastor of St. Gabriel's. The master of ceremonies was the Rev. Father Lewis of the Cathedral parish.

The new church will have a frontage on East Seventy-ninth Street of 80 feet and will be 150 feet deep. It will cost $150,000.

JEWISH SOLDIER-DEAD HONORED BY MONUMENT

Gen. Miles, Nathan Straus, Louis Stern Among the Speakers.

CALL WAR A NEEDLESS HORROR

Its Cost for One Year, Says Mr. Straus, Would Wipe Out Scourge of Consumption.

In memory of the Jewish soldiers who died in the service of the United States in the civil war the Hebrew Union Veterans' Association, assisted by the Citizens' Auxiliary Committee, unveiled a shaft of granite yesterday afternoon in the Salem Fields Cemetery, Cypress Hills, L. I. The monument is surmounted by a bronze eagle and bears the following inscription:

To the Memory of the Soldiers of the Hebrew Faith
Who Responded to the Call of Their Country
And Gave Their Lives for Its Salvation
During the Dark Days of Its Need
So That the Nation Might Live.

The Hebrew Union Veterans' Association, headed by the band and the cadets of the Hebrew Orphan Asylum, and followed by Col. A. H. Rogers and a battalion of the Grand Army of the Republic, marched to the monument, which was unveiled by Mrs. Amelia Stiner, widow of Col. Joseph H. Stiner. The Rev. Dr. Joseph Silverman offered the opening prayer. Nathan Straus presided over the ceremonies, and Jacob H. Mack introduced the speakers, among whom was Lieut. Gen. Nelson A. Miles, retired. Louis Stern, on behalf of the Trustees of Temple Emanu-El, accepted the monument. Nathan Straus delivered the first address, a deprecation of war. He said in part:

"We meet to honor the Jewish soldiers and sailors who sacrificed their lives for their country. While I yield to no man in my admiration of those who have sacrificed their lives in defense of their country, I shall protest to heaven against war and speak for peace. These dead whom we honor remind us that war is barbarism, against which every man should raise his voice in this age.

"War is only legal murder. How can we call ourselves civilized when we spend unlimited millions for organized military murder, and grudge the money that would save the health of nations, the lives of millions of children? The United States proposes to spend two hundred millions every year, and perhaps more, for fighting battleships. Think what that gigantic sum would accomplish if it were devoted to the health of humanity, and not to murder. Such a sum would wipe out consumption, which, more deadly than any war, costs the United States two hundred thousand lives each year. Such a sum would save every year the lives of the hundreds of thousands of children that die because their dwellings are filthy, their food impure, their bodies neglected.

"Let us honor these men who died for their fellow-men. Let us honor them especially in protest against needless death, wasted possibilities."

Lieut. Gen. Miles said in part:

"We are assembled to celebrate a most important event, to dedicate a monument that shall stand through the ages, a silent and enduring witness of devotion to civil government, of heroic deeds and great sacrifices. We come not to glorify a country, we come not to commend a faith, or exalt a race.

"On this occasion we could speak of a people that has given to the world its greatest lawgivers, its wisest patriarchs, prophets, and philosophers, its most astute and sagacious diplomatists, most eminent artists and composers, historians, theologians, and scientists of the first order, warriors, statesmen, financiers, and philanthropists whose achievements and benefactions will ever adorn the pages of history.

"In the civil war, lasting four years, in which one-fifth of the men engaged gave their lives for their country, the Jewish population furnished one brave soldier to every twenty-nine persons of their faith, including men, women, and children.

"In the great future, those that follow can emulate their example, either in war or the great industries and activities of life, where there is no sound of the warcannon or drum, promoting and uplifting the human family until it shall reach that higher civilization—

When the war drums throb no longer
And the battle flags are furled;
In the Parliament of Man,
The federation of the world."

Ferdinand Levy, accepting the monument in behalf of the Grand Army of the Republic, said in part:

"We will all, in the course of time, join the grand army which slowly but surely is marching to eternity. Our deeds, our work, our labor, will perish with our names, but this monument will stand for all time as an imperishable record of that true heroism, that loyal fidelity to the flag, which is the best and the truest bulwark of our principles.

"It is in this spirit that in behalf of the Grand Army of the Republic, the comrades of those of the Jewish faith, who after life's stormy struggle await the final bugle call, I accept this monument."

Other addresses were delivered by Gen. James Grant Wilson and J. A. Gruden. The closing prayer and "kaddish" was delivered by the Rev. Dr. H. Pereira Mendes.

SPEEDWAY RUNAWAY HALTED.

Mounted Policeman Fitzgerald Wins Applause by Pluck and Skill.

While the brushing at the Speedway was at its height yesterday Policeman Fitzgerald gave an exhibition of stopping a runaway. A horse driven by Fred Grote, who was accompanied by S. Rosenthal, both well-known road drivers, took fright coming down the stretch and bolted. Before the frightened animal had gone a hundred yards he ran into a two-seated carriage driven by Charles Greenwood.

The shock of the collision threw out Grote and Rosenthal, and damaged the Greenwood carriage so that it was impossible to drive it. Policeman Fitzgerald took up the chase near the finish post, but the runaway dodged him and gained a lead of a length. For a minute it looked as though the horse would get away, but the policeman reached even terms near Washington Bridge, and, leaning out of his saddle, swerved suddenly toward the runaway and grasped the bridle. MILK DEALERS UNITE TO IMPROVE THE SUPPLY

Will See That Product Is Wholesome and Properly Handled.

FREQUENT TESTS BY ANALYST

Association Includes Forty Firms and Individuals, and Will Co-operate with Department of Health.

Milk dealers in New York and Brooklyn have formed an organization called the Association for Improvement of the Milk Supply in New York. Dr. Ernest J. Lederle, ex-Health Commissioner, has been retained as consulting sanitarian, adviser, and analyst. The association will co-operate with the Department of Health. It already includes forty firms and individuals.

Members of the association in their individual capacities are already at work in the interest of the new movement, which has for its aim the scientific improvement of milk and its products. The work done includes periodical examination of milk that comes from the various stations and creameries, and of milk from the farms supplying each station.

When these examinations disclose opportunity for improvement in the milk further inspections are made at the creamery, especially to determine whether the sanitary conditions are as they should be. Any farmer who supplies milk below the creamery standard is notified of the fact and is told how to improve the product of his farm with regard both to the richness and the cleanliness of the milk.

Not only do the dealers aim at making the milk itself better, but they are trying to improve the condition under which it is shipped to New York City. Some of them are introducing Pasteurization. They also try to induce retailers who handle milk in the tenement districts to use better methods in caring for it while it is in their stores.

Another feature of the association's work will be a series of lectures by physicians, sanitarians, and food experts, designed to give the wholesale and retail dealer in milk further knowledge of the scientific side of his business.

"Up to the present time," says a statement authorized by Dr. Lederle, "the wholesaler has been in an unsatisfactory position with respect to the commodity he is handling. In most lines of trade the large dealer is either a direct manufacturer or else he is in a position to control the quality of the goods he is selling and to know the conditions under which his stock is made and distributed. It is otherwise with the dealer in milk. He has, at best, very uncertain control of the small farmers from whom he buys, and, while he can be reasonably sure of the methods used by his own employes in handling the milk in transit, he is again in danger of having his milk mishandled or adulterated by a retailer who may be dishonest.

"The result is that he has been buying and bringing into New York a product the quality of which is, at best, uncertain, and turning it over to retailers whose actions he cannot control. Meanwhile he is well aware that the question of the quality of the product is being constantly raised by the sanitary authorities, and the conditions of the business are such as to make him the responsible party in case of

EQUITABLE DIRECTORS CITED BY BRACKETT

To Answer for Mismanagement, If There Was Any.

SUMMONSED AT CONFERENCE

Twenty-three Directors Had Some Talk as to a New President—Formal Meeting Soon.

Gathered in the board room of the Equitable Life Assurance Society at 4 o'clock yesterday afternoon, discussing the charges and counter-charges made by the Hyde and Alexander parties against each other, were the following-named members of the Equitable Directorate:

Louis Fitzgerald,	M. Hartley Dodge,
Chauncey M. Depew,	J. F. de Navarro,
H. C. Deming,	Bradish Johnson,
George H. Squire,	August Belmont,
Charles S. Smith,	D. O. Mills,
Alvin W. Krech,	George J. Gould,
John J. McCook,	Thomas T. Eckert,
C. Ledyard Blair,	H. M. Alexander,
J. E. Ingalls,	H. C. Haarstick,
E. H. Harriman,	David H. Moffat,
Jacob H. Schiff,	Joseph T. Low.
C. B. Alexander,

There came a knock at the door.

"A card for Mr. Depew," the attendant announced.

Senator Depew stepped to the door, and just outside in the broad corridor where were gathered twoscore of reporters waiting for the result of the conference of Directors, he met a well-dressed young man, who handed him a paper.

"Will you kindly accept service, Senator," the young man said, smiling.

Mr. Depew, also smiling, accepted service and read the paper, which was a summons in the new suit of Mary S. Young of Saratoga County, Senator Brackett's client, demanding that every Director of the Equitable appear in the Supreme Court there and answer individually and as a Director for his responsibility for whatever mismanagement and dissipation of funds of the society there may have been by officers on either side of the pending controversy.

Mrs. Young is both a policy holder of $2,000 and the owner of one share of stock in the Equitable, and the present suit is the one which Attorney General Mayer gave Senator Brackett his permission to bring, after one action had been instituted by Mrs. Young seeking of Vice President James H. Hyde an accounting of his salary for the past two years, of Senator Depew an accounting of fees alleged to have been received for legal services performed over a succession of many years, and from Edward H. Harriman an accounting of profits alleged to have been made out of the sales of securities to the Equitable Life. The complaint in the present suit will be filed within a few days, the summons having been served yesterday because the informal conference of the board afforded an opportunity to find a considerable number of the Directors together at one time.

Way for it was payed by Justice John M. Kellogg in the Supreme Court at Ballston Spa yesterday, when he granted a motion by Senator Brackett discontinuing the first action instituted by Mrs. Young.

WHAT BRACKETT SAYS.

Senator Brackett in Ballston Spa yesterday explained his suit as follows:

"If what Mr. Hyde says is true or if what Mr. Alexander says is true, in concurrence with the statements of both these gentlemen, the policy holders' money, including that of my client, both as policy holder and stockholder, has been wasted. The body of men which the law requires to stand between my client and the waste of her money is the entire Board of Directors.

"My theory is that, according to Mr. Alexander's statements about James H. Hyde and Associates, and Mr. Hyde's statements about the Alexander faction, the Board of Directors has been guilty of negligence in allowing the funds of the society to be misused, misapplied, wasted, and perhaps something worse. What I am doing is to institute a legal inquiry addressed to each Director of the Equitable and to ask him to account for his stewardship."

The official statement which Senator Depew gave out on behalf of his fellow-conferrees after the meeting ended contained no reference to the visit of the well-dressed young man or to the paper which he asked Senator Depew to accept, but from a Director who was at the meeting it was learned last night that the burden of the talk of the last ten minutes was on the question of responsibility of the Directors for whatever mismanagement might be alleged, rather than upon the alleged mismanagement itself, as it had been up to the time that Mr. Depew stepped out into the hall.

A GENERAL CONFERENCE.

The statement given out by the Senator was as follows:

"Twenty-three members of the board were present to-day. Mr. Schiff called the conference to order, stating that he was not alone responsible for the meeting, but that many of the Directors had spoken to him of the necessity of the Directors meeting and conferring on the present situation and conditions in the society, and then stated at length reasons which he thought necessitated a general conference before official action should be taken by the board.

"Mr. Charles Stewart Smith was made Chairman, but no Secretary was appointed, in order that it should not take the form of a meeting, but merely be considered a conference. Speeches were made, with suggestions concerning the future management of the society, and action which the speakers thought the Board of Directors should take at their meeting. Every speech took the form of suggestions, and they were made by M. E. Ingalls, D. O. Mills, Jacob H. Schiff, C. S. Smith, E. H. Harriman, J. T. Low, George J. Gould, and Chauncey M. Depew.

"It was unanimously decided that it would be unwise, before the report of the

CHASED VANDERBILT'S AUTO.

Chauffeur of Racing Mercedes Resented Arrest After Dash.

Speeding up Seventh Avenue, William K. Vanderbilt, Jr.'s, ninety horse power Mercedes racing car was overtaken and captured last night by Bicycle Policeman Casey, whose motor bicycle is capable of a speed of fifty miles an hour. The French chauffeur flatly refused to go to the police station, and only the presence of an extra patrolman and a big crowd made him change his mind.

The Mercedes, said the chauffeur after he got to the station, is incapable of going under twenty-five miles an hour when the power is turned on. To go slower, the chauffeur, Henri de Dailloux, has to turn on the power a moment and then turn it off quickly. One cough sends the big machine about a block. The Mercedes is the car which made the records last year in Florida.

Casey first saw it last night at Seventh Avenue and Forty-fourth Street about 10 o'clock. The chauffeur, he said, seemed to have no heed for the dodging pedestrians and cabmen. The minute he saw the speeding car Casey, who was on his wheel but resting against the curb, turned on the full power of his motor and went in pursuit. Before he could get a good start the Mercedes was at Forty-sixth Street.

Gradually he gained on the racing car. Motormen stopped their cars and craned their necks after the pursued and pursuer. Over the switches in front of the car barn at Fiftieth Street the car and the motor cycle flew, but Casey drew up steadily. When the Mercedes got to Fifty-third Street, where the Sixth Avenue elevated line runs overhead and two trolley tracks on the surface, the officer shouted to the chauffeur to stop. The Frenchman kept on, and the automobile and the motor cycle bumped over the trolley tracks, Casey now only a few feet behind.

"Stop!" he shouted. "I'll shoot!"

This word worked like magic. The chug-chug stopped, the brakes were put on, and the big car came to a halt.

"Why ees eet you stop me?" demanded the Frenchman. "I have ze engagement with Meester Vanderbilt."

"I stopped you because you're racing up the streets at about three times the legal rate," said Casey. "Now come to the station with me!"

"Non, non," exclaimed De Dailleux, "I have ze engagement at 10 o'clock. I cannot go wiz you!"

Casey blew a whistle, and Patrolman Wood came up on the run. He got into the Mercedes. By this time a crowd had gathered, and everybody backed up the policemen. The chauffeur went to the station.

Casey said afterward that the machine made every block in four seconds, or at the rate of about forty-five miles an hour.

ONE MAN QUELLS MOB.

Newburg's District Attorney Seizes Leader's Gun and Disperses 300.

Special to The New York Times.

NEWBURG, March 8.—Armed with a shotgun which he snatched from a striker, District Attorney A. H. F. Seeger today cowed a mob of strikers at a brickyard south of this place and compelled them to disperse.

The strikers numbered about 300, recruited from the yards at Fishkill, Roseton, and Danskammer. They were mostly Italians and negroes armed with cordwood. They also got possession of a red flag, which they carried at the head of their column.

Their actions early in the day became so menacing to owners of the brick yards that Mr. Davidson and Mr. Lahey hurried down to Newburg for assistance. They got the District Attorney, the Sheriff, and about twenty men from the police of Newburg.

Arriving ahead of the others at the scene of trouble Mr. Seeger snatched a double-barrelled shotgun out of the hand of one of the strikers and, climbing on a slight elevation, ordered the mob to disperse.

"If there is any attempt at further demonstration there will be trouble," he said. "I want to say right here that anyone who is dissatisfied has a perfect right to strike. No one who does not want to work is forced to, but those who do want to work can do so and anyone who attempts to do any violence is going to get hurt."

There was a moment of silence. The crowd of strikers seemed awed with the grit of the single man.

"Dat's all right, Mistah Man," piped up a big negro in the end, "dat goes 's long 's you are here, but when yo' folks go away dem Dagoes will kill us. An' den what?"

At this point Mr. Lahey spoke up.

"I'm not particular about running my yard," he said. "I don't want the men to work under a gun. I don't think the men who desire to work are afraid, but I don't care to jeopardize them. I'll shut down the yard."

"We are going to put the ringleaders of this in a jail," added District Attorney Seeger.

This latter threat the District Attorney carried out. Among the group of men who formed the vigilance committee was Justice Flynn of New Windsor, and before him warrants were sworn out for several of the strikers.

Joseph Peasone, an Italian, and Cyrus White, a negro, were arrested and will be examined to-morrow on charges of inciting riot and disorderly conduct. The police and Deputy Sheriffs arrived on the scene after Seeger had quieted and scattered the mob.

WRECKED IN ROWBOAT, BOYS WANDER 3 DAYS

Lame Youngster Pledges Crutches for Craft.

DISASTER AT HIGHBRIDGE

Two Sleep Two Nights in Open Air—Robert Wilson, Deserter and Nickel Capitalist, Gets Three Thrashings.

Young Robert Wilson said last night that he would never stray away from home again. Early Saturday morning when he appeared in the Hell's Kitchen district he shouted to the other boys and exhibited 15 cents.

"I got coin meself," remarked Johnny Wood.

Wood, who is a cripple, leaned on his crutches while he reached into his pockets and produced a ten-cent piece.

"I got a dime, too," said George Bradler, and, acting on Wood's suggestion, they went to the pier at Fiftieth Street and hired a rowboat, Wood leaving his crutches as security.

Soon the three boys were drifting up the North River with the tide. They passed Spuyten Duyvil, and when King's Bridge came in sight the little rowboat was rocking and rolling. As it drifted beneath High Bridge it was dashed on the rocks and wrecked.

The boys swam to shore with difficulty. Exhausted, they lay down for an hour to rest.

"How are we goin' ter git home?" asked Wood finally.

He gave the other boys the slip, and made use of the trolley car transfer system, arriving at his home, 415 West Fifty-third Street, late Saturday night.

In the meantime a general alarm had been sent out by the police for the missing boys. Then came the news that in searching the river the wrecked rowboat had been found on the rocks at High Bridge.

Young Wilson told his parents that he had not gone out in the boat with the other boys. He said that to escape a thrashing, but he got it just the same for remaining away from home all day and scaring his parents.

Wood and Brodler kept wandering through the Bronx until midnight, when, tired and footsore, they lay down on the top of Marble Hill. There they slept until Sunday morning. Wood could not go far without crutches, so Bradler went foraging and returned with a loaf of bread, 10 cents, and information how to reach New York.

Two limbs from a tree were used in place of his crutches, and after walking many miles they got into Harlem late Sunday night. By the time they reached Central Park it was midnight, so they camped out beneath an arbor of vines.

Early yesterday morning they again took up their tramp. At Sixth Avenue and Fifty-eighth Street, Bradler got a job running errands for a fruiterer. He was in a fair way to earn money when some one read a newspaper description of the missing boys.

Word was sent to Brodler's home, in West Fifty-third Street, and Brodler's sister and father rounded up the boys yesterday afternoon. Then they were taken home, and Wilson got another thrashing for not telling he had been with them, and a third thrashing from the boys whom he had deserted.

MRS. MEYER IN ACCIDENT.

Shaft of Surrey Plunged by Runaways Into Her Auto.

Mrs. Cord Meyer, Jr., had a narrow escape from being killed yesterday afternoon when the shaft of a surrey, whose horses had become unmanageable, was thrust through the rear of her automobile. But for the fact that she jumped to her feet the shaft must have struck her.

Mrs. Meyer was in her big traveling car in which she had ridden from her country place at Great Neck, L. I., when the accident happened. The car was standing in front of the Long Island Railroad station in Long Island City, and the chauffeur was standing on the sidewalk beside it. Mrs. Meyer was expecting a friend to meet her. While the crowds were getting off a ferryboat the team of horses attached to a double-seated surrey left the boat and in the whirl of vehicles the horses became unmanageable and started on a run up Borden Avenue.

Mrs. Meyer had her back turned toward the oncoming horses. As the horses neared the automobile they swerved and the shaft of the surrey went crashing into the rear of the automobile. Mrs. Meyer jumped to her feet. The shaft plunged clear through the metal covering on the back of the machine. Then the runaways stopped.

MRS. OSBORN GETS DIVORCE.

Dressmaker May Remarry at the End of Three Months.

Mrs. Josepha Neilson Osborn, the dressmaker who for a short time ran Mrs. Osborn's Playhouse, in West Forty-fourth Street, has obtained an interlocutory decree of divorce from her husband, Robert A. Osborn, from whom she has been separated for a year. As she has successfully conducted her dressmaking establishment, she did not ask for alimony. By the terms of the decree at the end of three months she will be free to marry again. Mr. and Mrs. Osborn were married on June 8, 1898. The couple have one child, who has been legally adopted by Mrs. Osborn's stepfather, Jacob Stout.

Much secrecy was maintained in the divorce action, which was started about a year ago. It was sent before Francis L. Patton, Jr., as referee, to take testimony.

REJECTED BY MRS. SHERIDAN.

Plans for Husband's Monument Must Be Recommenced.

WASHINGTON, May 8.—At a meeting of the Philip H. Sheridan Monument Commission to-day Mrs. Sheridan emphatically disapproved of the model prepared by direction of the committee of the Army of the Cumberland.

It was decided that the committee, which has already expended $2,500, should be requested to turn over to the commission the $4,000 remaining in its hands and that the commission should request Congress to increase the appropriation to a sum sufficient to make the available balance about $70,000. Then all the work will be done over again and new designs prepared.

JAPANESE SCOURGE OF GOD.

View of Kaiser—He Hopes Germany Will Not Be Chastised Like Russia.

BERLIN, May 8.—The Evangelische Kirchen Zeitung to-day prints a detailed report of Emperor William's remarks when swearing in the naval recruits at Wilhelmshaven on March 9, in which, according to the very brief report published at the time, he cited the Japanese as a luminous example of patriotism and soldierly fidelity.

The Kirchen Zeitung's résumé of the speech is as follows:

"The Emperor referred to the heroic deeds of the Japanese, and added that these were born out of Japanese patriotism and love for children, which in turn resulted in splendid discipline in the army and navy. One must not, however, draw the conclusion from Japanese victories—victories of a heathen over a Christian people—that Buddha was superior to our Lord Christ."

The Russians' defeat, in his opinion, was due to the fact that Russian Christianity was in a deplorable condition. The Japanese, on the other hand, could show many Christian virtues. A good Christian made a good soldier.

Among the German people, too, Christianity was in a sad condition; and he doubted whether we Germans, in case of war, would have the right to pray to God for victory, to force it from Him like Jacob wrestling with the angel.

The Japanese, he said, were the scourge of God, like Attila and Napoleon. It devolved upon us to take care that God did not chastise us some day with such a scourge.

WOMAN GETS $8,850 BACK.

Aged Couple Found It on a Williamsburg Sidewalk.

Mrs. Mary Slavin of 57 South Sixth Street, Williamsburg, who on Friday last lost $8,850 which she had drawn from the Williamsburg Trust Company, Broadway and Bedford Avenue, was rejoicing at her home last night over the recovery of the money.

An aged couple, who refused to give their names, and who had found the money, visited the home of Mrs. Slavin and presented the money to her. They said that they had found the money in front of the Nassau Trust Company, lying in the street.

Regarding the identity of the couple, all that Mrs. Slavin would say was that they lived on Madison Street, Brooklyn, and attended the Catholic Church of St. John the Baptist. Mrs. Slavin, who is the wife of a longshoreman, and the mother of five children, was ill at her home as the result of losing the money when the finders of her property appeared at her house. The old couple said that on Sunday while attending mass they overheard persons talking about Mrs. Slavin's loss. They learned her address, and decided to return the money to her.

Mrs. Slavin fainted from joy when she discovered that her money had come back to her. After considerable urging Mrs. Slavin got the aged couple to accept $200 as a reward. They refused at first to accept it, saying that they had a son who was a priest, and that he would feel sorry if their identity was known and any notoriety was attached to the couple.

TO GET RUSSIAN CONTRACTS.

Americans, It Is Said, Will Build Warships Costing $65,000,000.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, May 8.—Eight battleships and twenty cruisers, armored and second class, to cost approximately $65,000,000, will be built for the Russian Government by American shipbuilders, according to a representative of the Russian Admiralty who arrived in this city to-day. This supports the statements in recent cablegrams that a large part of the work of constructing a new Russian navy will come to the United States.

In speaking of the plans to increase the strength of the Russian Navy, the representative of the Russian Admiralty, who is at the Bellevue-Stratford, said that fifty-four vessels in all, including destroyers, would be built. He added that Charles M. Schwab and other Americans would surely obtain the contracts for more than a third of the vessels to be built.

After a visit to the Cramp yards to-morrow the engineer will go to New York to meet Mr. Schwab, who will arrive from Europe on Wednesday.

POLICEMAN SAVES WOMEN.

Hawkins Rescues Two at Fire Started by Pot of Grease.

During a fire in the three-story building at 2,210 Third Avenue last night Mrs. Mary Grogan and another woman were rescued by Policeman Hawkins of the East One Hundred and Twenty-sixth Street Station. The fire was in the restaurant of "Joe" Sevegs, which was filled with diners. All rushed to the street in the excitement, leaving coats and hats behind. The restaurant was wrecked and the damage is estimated at $1,000.

While one of the cooks was away from the stove a pot of grease boiled over. Efforts were made to extinguish the flames, but the fire spread. Mrs. Grogan ran to a window and shouted for help. With her was another woman. Policeman Hawkins ran through the halls, which were filled with smoke, and found Mrs. Grogan and the other woman nearly overcome at the top of the stairs.

The policeman seized Mrs. Grogan and got to the stairs. When he reached the second floor he found that the other woman had not followed. He put Mrs. Grogan on the floor and then searched for the other woman. Finding her, he led her down to where he had left Mrs. Grogan.

Lifting Mrs. Grogan in his arms and leading the other woman, the policeman made his way through the halls to the street, where he was loudly cheered.

POLICE CHANGES COMING.

May Be Some Enforced Retirements of Higher Officers This Week.

Police Commissioner McAdoo practically acknowledged yesterday that there might be some enforced retirements of the higher officers of the department this week. Asked if he would be able to announce the retirements this week, the Commissioner hesitated and then replied: "It is not unlikely that I will make some announcement of retirements this week."

He was then asked if he would make any shake-up this week.

"Unless I change my mind, and it is not likely that I will, I will make some startling promotions and they will hold for the present," he said.

The Commissioner and others did not enjoy the Lenten season. Now they are enjoying life. Try Cook's Imperial Champagne. It is the finest.—Adv.

SWIFT MISSOURI WINS RACE OF BATTLESHIPS

Seven Big Fighting Craft in Eight-Hour Dash.

New Ship's Propellers Out of Order and She Comes Here to Dry Dock—Flagship Maine Second.

Seven of the largest battleships in the United States Navy ploughed up the Atlantic Ocean in a spirited race for eight hours on Saturday. The Missouri was the victor, covering 126½ miles in the eight hours. The surprise of the race was the poor showing made by the new Alabama, which from the very start gradually fell behind the others until at the end of the race it was more than sixteen miles behind the winner.

There is something wrong with the Alabama's propellers, and the officers cannot diagnose the trouble until the battleship goes into dry dock.

The race of Uncle Sam's steeliad fighters was no cut-and-dried affair. Half an hour before it began not half a dozen men knew it was to take place. Rear Admiral Robley D. Evans, on board his flagship, the Maine, saw that the ocean was smooth and just right for a speed test. He signaled to the Alabama, on which Rear Admiral Charles H. Davis flies his flag, and to the other boats.

When this happened the squadron was on its way from Pensacola, Fla., to Hampton Roads, Va. The battleships that were in the race were the Missouri, the Maine, the Kearsarge, the Kentucky, the Iowa, the Massachusetts, and the Alabama—as fine a lot of ships as could be picked from the world's navies.

The start was made exactly at 10 o'clock Saturday morning two hundred miles south of Cape Henry, Va. For the first few minutes all seven seemed to be on even terms, but soon the Alabama began to drop behind.

According to Rear Admiral Evans's orders natural draught was to be used for two hours, then forced draught for four hours, and natural draught for the two hours remaining.

Half an hour after the race began the Missouri gained the lead and did not lose it once. When 12 o'clock came she was nearly two miles ahead. The flagship Maine made a desperate spurt then, and began to crawl up on the winner, but the Missouri again drew ahead. After that the excitement lay in the contest between the second and third ships, the Maine and the Kearsarge. It was nip and tuck all the afternoon, and when the end came at 6 o'clock the Kearsarge was a mile behind the Maine. This was the result:

	Ahead of Next Boat. Miles.		Ahead of Next Boat. Miles.
Missouri	1	Iowa	2
Maine	1	Massachusetts	1
Kearsarge	1	Alabama
Kentucky

The Alabama, which will be drydocked as soon as possible, was the only battleship that came on to New York.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, May 8.—Fresh from an eventful race on the way from Pensacola, Fla., to Hampton Roads, Va., in which she had competed with six other vessels of the North Atlantic Squadron, the battleship Massachusetts arrived at League Island Navy Yard this evening. She will go into dry dock.

Although she had been next to the last in the race, her officers were elated over the excellent showing the veteran of Santiago had made against the more recently constructed Missouri, Maine, Kearsarge, and Kentucky, that kept ahead of her.

"It was a great race," said Capt. R. D. Tausaig of the Massachusetts. "We spent hours on the quarterdeck watching through our glasses other vessels, with the exception of the old Alabama, forging ahead of us.

"With the exception of the speedy Missouri we managed to keep them all pretty well in view. Perhaps the most exciting feature of the race was the speed contest between the Kearsarge and Kentucky, which, I believe, are sister ships.

"It was nip and tuck between these two nearly all the time. First the Kearsarge would obtain the lead upon the Kentucky, but not for long. The latter would take a sudden spurt and reel off the knots so rapidly that often she would show her sister ship on her heels.

"Nearly every man, officer, and man-of-warsmen alike, kept wagering on the two ships, and goodness only knows how many wagers were won and lost before the race ended. Well, I won something."

FERRYBOAT WAS IN PERIL.

Passengers in Panic When New York and Maryland Bump.

By a narrow margin the ferryboat New York of the Fulton Street line, with her forward decks crowded with passengers, escaped being cut down at 7:40 o'clock last night by the big transport Maryland of the New Haven Road. By quick action on the part of the pilots of both crafts the vessels were veered off, so that the impending crash developed into a side bump.

When the huge bulk of the transport boat bore down on the ferry the passengers crowded to the port side. The boat careened with the bump and climbed up on the Maryland, whose great size and steadiness held the ferryboat until she slid off and righted.

The rail on the starboard side of the ferryboat was crushed and splintered and the ferry wheel covering on that side torn. There was a panic among the 75 or 100 passengers aboard the ferryboat, and they were transferred to the Maryland. Among the passengers was perhaps a dozen women. The New York was able, however, to proceed under her own steam to the yards of the ferry company, at the foot of Atlantic Avenue, for repairs. It is not known what damage, if any, was done to the transport.

SOUND ROBBERS BUSY.

Wiseman Home at Throgg's Neck Pilfered While Guests Sleep.

Once more the residents of the Country Club section and Throgg's Neck [illegible] ing the coming of robbers who for several seasons have carried on operations in homes along Long Island Sound. It is believed that several recent robberies can be traced to this gang.

News of the most recent robbery was reported to the police by F. De R. Wiseman, a real estate operator of 55 Liberty Street, who has a handsome home on Throgg's Neck, adjoining the property of the late Collis P. Huntington. Mr. Wiseman and his family at the time of the robbery were still occupying their town house, at 707 Fifth Avenue, and the house was in charge of caretakers.

Despite the fact that two men were asleep in the house when the robbery was committed, the intruders did not awake the sleepers. The robbers went all over the house, got a lot of silverware and other articles, and ate and drank at the expense of the owner of the house.

OTERI'S CAPTAIN SUSPENDED.

Employers Punish Him for Refusing to Aid President's Yacht.

Special to The New York Times.

BALTIMORE, May 8.—Capt. W. H. Hotville of the United Fruit Company's steamer Oteri has been suspended for his alleged failure to render assistance to the President's yacht Sylph, which he found disabled off the Florida coast.

Capt. Hotville's alleged action created a strong feeling of resentment against him, which culminated in an official investigation. Lieut. Evans of the Sylph reported Capt. Hotville as replying when asked to take the yacht in tow: "I am no damned towboat!"

"I Did It All Myself," Wrote Missouri Cashier Before He Fled.

WAVERLY, Mo., May 8.—During an investigation by State Auditors into an alleged shortage in the funds of the Middleton Bank a note was found to-day, signed by Cashier E. H. Lewis, in which, referring to Assistant Cashier Warner, Lewis wrote:

"You must not accuse Mr. Warner of wrecking this bank. He had nothing to do with it. I did it all myself.

"E. H. LEWIS."

The note was found in Lewis's private box. The police have been searching for Lewis since April 24, but have not found a clue. The Auditors say that $82,000 is missing.

STRIKING DECLINE OF A STAR.

Is This Variable in the Constellation Corona About to Disappear?

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, May 8.—The changes in light of the variable star 154428 R. Coronae are unlike those that are known to occur in any other variable star. A long series of observations at the Harvard College Observatory, mainly by Leon Campbell, shows that it underwent remarkable changes from the magnitude 6 to 9.4-10 during the interval from March to September, 1903.

Since then until March, 1905, the light has been nearly constant, and of the magnitude 6. The magnitudes on April 1, April 11, April 21, May 1, and May 7, 1905, were about 6, 7.3-10, 8.4-10, 11.4-10, and 12.5-10, respectively.

Observations with large telescopes are much to be desired during the next few days to see if it disappears entirely. No apparatus is required; it is only necessary to compare it's light with that of the adjacent comparison stars whose positions and magnitudes are given in the Harvard annals, xxxvii., 168. This object is nearly equidistant from Gamma Libra and Eta Coronae. It is readily recognized on the Harvard map of the sky, Plate No. 18, cxviii., 75.

KIRKE LA SHELLE ILL.

Playwright May Have Blood Poisoning as Result of Accident.

BELLPORT, L. I., May 8.—Kirke La Shelle, the playwright and theatrical manager, is very ill at his Summer home in this village. Mr. La Shelle has been here for about two weeks, with Mrs. La Shelle and his two children.

For the last week Mr. La Shelle has been suffering with a sore foot, the result of an accident with a heavy lawn roller, and blood poisoning was feared. On Friday Mr. La Shelle in regulating his steam heating in his cellar was scalded by a bursting hot water valve. A consultation of physicians was held on Sunday last. It is hoped he will recover in a short time.

TOOK POISON ON BROADWAY.

Parents' Difference Said to Have Distressed Ella Sorbey.

Ella Sorbey, a waitress, nineteen years of age, tried to kill herself by drinking laudanum last night at Broadway and Leonard Street, in the presence of two girl friends and a young man. She was hurriedly removed to the Hudson Street Hospital, where, it is said, her life is despaired of.

She had two letters in her dress, one addressed to her father and the other to her mother, who are said by the police to be living apart. Her friends say that the differences of her parents preyed on the girl's mind.

With Ella Sorbey early last evening at the corner of Leonard Street were Edith Wilmer of 123 Leonard Street, Gussie Schuester of the same address, and a young man who, the girls say, is Thomas Mullane. Mullane, Miss Wilmer said, is merely an acquaintance.

Yesterday afternoon Ella Sorbey witnessed "The Fatal Wedding" at the Third Avenue Theatre and cried almost throughout the performance. She had been living at times with her mother, at 8 Batavia Street, and at other times with a married sister, Mrs. Kenney, at 76 King Street. The letter to her father was addressed to "Mr. J. W. Sorbey, 54 North Moore Street."

FRANCE HAS DRIVEN RUSSIAN FLEET OUT

Is Now Ready to Prevent by Force Breaches of Neutrality.

ADMIRAL DEAF TO REQUESTS

Only When Jonquieres Backed Up His Representations by Warships Did Rojestvensky Heed Him.

LONDON TIMES—NEW YORK TIMES.
Special Cable. Copyright, 1905.

PARIS, May 8.—It is stated positively that in consequence of the urgent representations of the French authorities the Russian Baltic Fleet cleared out of French territorial waters about three days ago.

Instructions have been sent from Paris that the Russians be requested not to return and not to make use of French territorial waters as a base of operations.

Furthermore, adequate police measures have been taken to prevent any of the belligerents' ships from entering French Indo-Chinese territorial waters or making use of them for any purpose whatever.

It is emphatically denied that the French authorities were passive onlookers while the Russians took in coal and provisions. Admiral Rojestvensky was repeatedly requested to leave Kamranh Bay and his subsequent moorings in Indo-Chinese waters, but it was not until Admiral de Jonquières was able to back up his representations to the Russians by a small naval force that he obtained a hearing.

I am fully persuaded that Rojestvensky has nothing more to expect from the complaisance of the French authorities. The latter fully realize the risk of danger in further countenancing the outrageous abuse of the Franco-Russian alliance perpetrated by the hero of Dogger Bank.

I have just heard on good authority that among the stringent measures taken by the Indo-Chinese authorities is the cutting off of all telegraphic communication between the Russian fleet and the mainland.

By The Associated Press.

PARIS, May 8.—An official dispatch was received here to-night saying that the Russian Pacific Squadron had left Kong-Hai (Kanh-Hea, or Nha-trang) Bay.

This follows the efforts of the French authorities to keep the squadron moving. Its destination is not given.

Dr. Motono, the Japanese Minister, went to the Foreign Office last evening, and had an extended interview with Foreign Minister Delcassé. The nature of their conversation has not been disclosed, but it is understood that Dr. Motono referred to Japan's increasing impatience regarding the alleged breaches of neutrality.

A semi-official note issued this afternoon said:

"Contrary to the allegation contained in a dispatch from Hongkong to a foreign agency, not only has the French Government not disregarded the rules of neutrality, but after sending its civil and military agents very precise instructions for the enforcement of those rules, the Government has unremittingly seen to their execution."

The critical tone of the British press concerning France's alleged breaches of neutrality brought out an emphatic general statement to-day from the Foreign Office that the accusations are unfounded. An official said:

"It is universally known that the Japanese Intelligence Department is exceptionally efficient. Therefore, if there had been specific breaches of neutrality the Japanese Government would have been aware of them, and would have presented specific charges to the French Government.

"So far, however, Japan's official action has been confined to requesting France to exercise strict neutrality. She has not made any specific charge, nor have any specific acts of violation of neutrality yet been brought to our attention."

Reports, nevertheless, are current here that the positive instructions sent by the officials in Paris receive perfunctory execution on the part of their subordinates in Indo-China owing to the sympathy between the civil and naval French Russian authorities.

SAIGON, May 8.—Admiral Rojestvensky's squadron has been located by Admiral de Jonquières's intelligence department in the neighborhood of a bay southward of Hon-Kohe Bay.

Rojestvensky was warned, and said he would leave immediately.

ROJESTVENSKY HIS OWN LAW.

British Admiral Says He Takes No Orders from Anybody.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.
[Copyright, 1905.]

LONDON, Tuesday, May 9.—The semi-official note issued in Paris in which it is represented that France has strictly enforced neutrality with respect to Admiral Rojestvensky's fleet does not greatly impress the British public, which is convinced that if France had done her full duty in the matter of neutrality the Baltic Fleet would not have been able to advance so near to Japan.

At the same time it is recognized that France has had a very ugly customer to handle. The view here seems to be that Rojestvensky is amenable to no authority but his own.

"There are three parties to the war," a British Admiral remarked yesterday. "The first is Russia. The second is Japan. The third is Rojestvensky."

takes no orders from anybody, but does just as he pleases, and it may be that France is not so much to blame as was at first ought.

"It would seem, however, that she would stand better in the eyes of the world if she had gone after Rojestvensky with a few good warships and enforced her demands if necessary. It was her duty to enforce neutrality, not simply to request its observance."

BRITAIN ADVISED FRANCE.

Communicated with Her in Regard to Her Attitude to Rojestvensky.

LONDON, Tuesday, May 9.—Verbal communications quite recently passed between the British and French Foreign Offices concerning the alleged toleration by France of breaches of neutrality on the part of the Russian warships in the Far East.

This was practically admitted at the Foreign Office yesterday, but the officials declined to enter into details on the subject.

From another source it is learned that Foreign Secretary Lansdowne communicated with the French Ambassador in London and with the French Foreign Office through the British Ambassador at Paris within the last few days.

Baron Hayashi, the Japanese Minister, said yesterday that from what he had seen in the papers he believed the Russian warships were not observing French neutrality. He added that it was not alone the question of the Russian ships being within the three-mile limit, Japan just as strongly objecting to the Russian squadron making a base of Indo-China, lying outside the three-mile limit and receiving supplies from French ports.

Baron Hayashi laid stress on the statement that the French Government had refused to allow press dispatches to be sent from Saigon, and said he understood that to be a violation of the international telegraph agreement.

NEBOGATOFF PASSES SAIGON.

Russian Admiralty Believes He Has Joined Rojestvensky.

HONGKONG, May 8.—A dispatch from Saigon reports that Admiral Nebogatoff's division passed that place to-day.

ST. PETERSBURG, Tuesday, May 9.—According to dispatches to the Admiralty taken to Saigon by the hospital ship Kostroma, the junction of Admirals Rojestvensky and Nebogatoff is by this time an accomplished fact.

The Admiralty professes ignorance of the present location of the united squadron, but in view of the long and uninterrupted voyage of Nebogatoff's division it is believed his ships will spend some time in sheltered waters of the China Sea, near the coast, but outside the three-mile limit, in order to complete recoaling and other preparations before setting out on the last and crucial stage of the voyage.

MAY FIGHT IN MONGOLIA.

Japan Refuses to Limit the War Zone in That Territory.

ST. PETERSBURG, May 8.—Japan has refused to agree to a definition of the limits of the war zone in Mongolia west of the present positions of the armies.

Until after the Russian defeat at Mukden and while the operations were confined to Manchuria the neutral zone was well established, although claims of violation were preferred by both beligerents. North of Tie Pass—Mongolia juts eastward across the railroad, and the limit of the zone of hostilities has never been fixed.

In view of the fact that the Japanese used Sing-min-Tung to effect their turning movement against Mukden, Gen. Linevitch called upon the authorities at St. Petersburg to secure a definition of the line—northward, and Russia made proposals that the Government at Peking delimit the zone, but the answers from China were evasive, Japan declining to bind herself.

For the present, therefore, Gen. Linevitch is free to take such measures as he deems proper to protect himself from a hostile movement in the direction of Mongolia.

OVER 16,000 RUSSIANS SICK.

About the Same Number of Wounded Still in the East.

GUNSHU PASS, May 8.—In view of the exaggerated reports of sickness in the Russian Armies published abroad, The Associated Press is authorized to give the following figures, furnished from headquarters, of the number of sick in the entire region from Baikal east to Vladivostok:

In hospitals—Wounded, 769 officers and 14,904 men; sick, 1,137 officers and 13,918 men.

In sanitary trains—Wounded, 35 officers and 774 men; sick, 45 officers and 472 men.

In hospitals for convalescents—Wounded, 216; sick, 332.

ZEMSTVOISTS ASK SUFFRAGE.

Resolution in Favor of It Passed Almost Unanimously.

MOSCOW, May 8.—The Zemstvo Congress to-day, by a vote of 127 to 8, adopted a resolution in favor of universal suffrage.

Other resolutions were adopted declaring for the secret ballot, the vote being 87 to 49, and the creation of a representative body composed of upper and lower chambers, the vote being 107 to 29.

KAISER'S ROMP WITH SAILORS.

Emperor and Empress Hid Oranges, for Which Crew of Yacht Hunted.

BERLIN, May 8.—The Neueste Nachrichten prints a letter from a member of the crew of the Imperial yacht Hohenzollern describing the Easter Day romp of Emperor William and the Empress.

After the sailors had received their Easter eggs and other presents they were all sent below while their majesties hid oranges in the cabins and in various places around the deck. The sailors then returned and hunted for the oranges.

"You have found all but two," said the Emperor at length, and there was a fresh hunt. Finally one of the sailors saw the Emperor's pocket bulging, put his hand into it, and took out an orange.

The other missing orange was found in the Empress's parasol.

MUJIKS BURNING ESTATES.

Twenty Persons Shot Down in a Riot Near Tiflis.

ST. PETERSBURG, Tuesday, May 9.—A general revolutionary movement has begun among the peasants of the Province of Bessarabia. They have attacked and burned several estates. The valuable estate of Prince Abamolek is among those destroyed.

Peasants have set fire to the property of Prince Lazareff at Kherson. A strong force of dragoons has been dispatched to Kherson.

The Moscow committee of the Social Revolutionists is circulating among the peasants thousands of copies of a proclamation calling upon them to exact oaths from their sons on entering the army never to raise their hands against peasants or workmen. "If ordered to quell riots," the proclamation says, "let them direct their rifles against the officers who would make of them accursed fratricides."

TIFLIS, May 8.—Police who were attempting to arrest two men who had tried to murder a nobleman in a village near here were attacked by a mob of peasants and [illegible] were killed.

STOCKHOLDERS IGNORED PENNSYLVANIA'S BONDS

Subscribed Only 10 Per Cent. of New $100,000,000 Issue.

BANKERS TOOK REMAINDER

Vice President Green Sees Nothing Significant in the Apathy of Investors.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, May 8.—It is announced here that Pennsylvania Railroad shareholders have subscribed to only about 10 per cent. of the company's $100,000,000 worth of new 3½ per cent. convertible bonds. It had been expected that the stockholders, following precedents, would subscribe liberally.

The issue which is the largest of its kind in railroad annals, was offered at par, the bonds being convertible into stock at 150. The stock was selling at 145 when the offer was made, and today it sold at 134, a dividend of 3 per cent. having been declared last week.

A syndicate headed by J. P. Morgan & Co. and Kuhn, Loeb & Co., was formed to underwrite the bonds, and the syndicate will now be called on to finance the $90,000,000 left by stockholders.

The bonds were issued to take up the $27,480,000 of consolidated 6 per cent. bonds maturing this year, and to improve the road, including the terminal work in and near New York.

It was said to-day that no particular effort was made by the road to sell the bonds, the Pennsylvania officers and the syndicate being willing that they should go to the bankers.

Capt. John P. Green, First Vice President of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, said to-night:

"It is not at all significant that the stockholders did not take the entire bond issue. They had the privilege of so doing if they wished. But they probably did not like the state of the market at the time, or possibly they are investing heavily in something else. The bonds are all sold now. The bankers agreed to take 90 per cent. of them. It makes no difference to the company whether the stockholders or the bankers take them."

REVENGE TOO DEAR FOR HER.

Arrested Autoist's Wife Desists and Four Prisoners Divide Cost.

Special to The New York Times.

GREENWICH, Conn., May 8.—Four autoists divided the costs of Judge C. D. Burns's speed-law session of court here this morning. That was $15 each, in addition to the fine of $5. There wouldn't have been so many had not the energetic wife of the first victim been informed of the court's edict under which the whole expense, $80, would fall on him were he the only one arrested.

In revenge on the officers of the law for interruption of her automobile trip yesterday this woman took up station on the Boston Post Road and warned passing automobile chauffeurs of the watch that was set for violators of the speed law. Several auto parties had received the warning thankfully when the revengeful wife learned of the probable cost of her work to her husband. Then she desisted, and three other speeders were soon in the toils.

"To h—l with the Sheriff!" one occupant of a machine said, when he found what the officer had stopped him for. But the officer jumped on and threatened to blow a hole in the tires if the machine was not headed toward Judge Burns's residence. The owner gave in and placed a fifty-dollar bond for appearance to-day.

The four who paid up were Russel Grinnell of Providence, Charles J. Harrah of 27 East Sixty-fourth Street, New York, a broker; F. J. Lisman, and Lafayette Markle of New York.

KILLED BY CORN LOTION.

Elmore D. Moffett, Prominent Plainfield Democrat, Dead.

Special to The New York Times.

PLAINFIELD, May 8.—A lotion used to cure a corn two weeks ago caused the death of Elmore D. Moffett, a local Justice of the Peace, by blood poisoning today.

Mr. Moffett was widely known as a Democratic politician. After returning from the civil war he became interested in grocery enterprises. Later he was elected Deputy County Clerk, holding that place for sixteen years. He was at one time President of the local Common Council, and was for many years Chairman of the Democratic City Committee. Mr. Moffett was a Mason of high degree.

HUSBAND MUST PAY UP.

Otto Kainer, Before Marriage, Promised Wife-to-Be $10,000.

Because her husband did not pay to her money which she says he promised, Mrs. Kathleen M. Kainer sued him in the Supreme Court and got a judgment against him yesterday. In her complaint Mrs. Kainer said that Otto H. Kainer in 1903 promised to give her $10,000 if she married him, and in addition to pay her $10,000 a year after the marriage.

She swore that he failed to keep his promise, although she kept her part of the agreement by marrying him. When he refused to pay up on demand she brought her suit. She says that the summons and complaint were served upon her husband at his office, in Wall Street, but that he paid no attention to them. The court awarded Mrs. Kainer the full amount with interest.

BURNS KILL BANKER'S NIECE.

Miss Elsie Cornell Mills Tried to Extinguish Blazing Curtain.

As a result of burns received on Sunday night, Miss Elsie Cornell Mills, member of a prominent family of the Hill district of Brooklyn, died at her home, 52 South Portland Avenue, yesterday. Miss Mills was the niece and adopted daughter of Thomas H. Curtis, a member of the banking and brokerage firm of I. F. Mead & Co. of 44 Broadway, Manhattan. Mr. Curtis's hands were burned while trying to save the young woman's life.

Miss Mills was in her room on the second floor of the house on Sunday night when a lace window curtain, blown against a lighted gas jet, caught fire. While she was trying to put out the flames Miss Mills's clothing caught. Her cries brought servants and Mr. Curtis to the room. The fire was extinguished, but not until Miss Mills had been fatally burned.

CHICAGO WINS CAR LINE.

Judge Grosscup Holds That Adams Street Franchise Has Expired.

CHICAGO, May 8.—Judge Grosscup today denied a motion of the Union Traction Company to enjoin the city from intrefering with the use of the Adams Street line of the old Chicago Passenger Railway Company. Judge Grosscup said he had withheld the decision believing that it would hinder negotiations for an agreement between the city and the traction interests, but that as soon as he found negotiations had been balked he framed his decision.

He holds that the franchise of the Chicago Passenger Railway Company expired in April, 1904. The city will now use the Adams Street line as a beginning for municipal ownership street railway system.

EQUITABLE DIRECTORS CITED BY BRACKETT

investigating committee was made to the Board of Directors, for any resolution to be adopted or any definite action suggested. The only affirmative action taken was that the board should be called together not later than the 31st of the month, and upon ample notice, so that the Directors from a distance could, as they were anxious to, arrange their affairs to be present, and that the investigating committee should, if possible, make its report then."

Supplementing this official statement, a Director who attended the conference said last night:

"Mr. Frick sent word to the meeting through Mr. Harriman that he was thoroughly in sympathy with its purpose, but that in view of his position as Chairman of the investigating committee his presence might be inopportune, if not indelicate, and he felt that the investigating committee was sufficiently represented by Mr. Ingalls and Mr. Harriman.

TALKED OF NEW PRESIDENT.

"In all the talk there was no very direct suggestion that Mr. Alexander, or Mr. Hyde, or Mr. Tarbell be made to resign. However, the names of some candidates for the Presidency of the society were talked of. There was no suggestion that any of the Directors thought of resigning, and, indeed, I do not know of any one who has ever expressed such an intention."

From another Director came the assertion that after Mr. Schiff had called the meeting to order he said that he thought something must be done to end the present controversy, and suggested the advisability of calling some prominent man into the society, with a view to accomplishing this result. Messrs. Ingalls, Low, and Mills were said to have replied to Mr. Schiff to the effect that until the investigations were concluded and the board knew definitely of the truth or falsity of the charges made, it ought to take no action. A suggestion was said to have come from Mr. Mills that steps be taken for the retirement of the stock by legislative action.

It was also ascertained last night that the Directors did have before them one definite proposition which received thorough discussion up to the time that the call was made for Senator Depew. This was that Gov. Higgins should be requested to call an extra session of the Legislature, or, if he had decided to call such a session anyway, that a bill should be introduced providing for an automatic mutualization of the society in a way that would avoid the legal and personal controversy that has been in progress since the 1st of February.

ILL-TIMED, THIS MAN SAYS.

A Director who has been with President Alexander in previous meetings of the board said last night that, although the talk was all of an informal character, he considered the meeting ill-timed and ill-advised, inasmuch as no relief for the present situation could possibly be effected until the Frick investigating committee should report.

"The session was something of a fizzle," the Director continued. "It was apparent that the Directors of the society do not propose to bind themselves to any selfish project or interested scheme of reprisal, and that no proposition will hereafter be entertained by the board that is not examined with a sole regard to the permanent and far-reaching interests of the society, quite apart from the interests of the hitherto dominant factor in the board. There was absolutely no discussion to-day of the resignation of Mr. Alexander or any one else."

In connection with the examination into the syndicate operations of "James H. Hyde and associates," the assertion was made yesterday in quarters friendly to Mr. Hyde that in the case of the first Japanese loan, in 1904, of which the Equitable Society, Mr. Hyde and President Alexander appeared all as underwriters according to the previously published accounts, President Alexander himself underwriting both for the society and for the syndicate, Mr. Hyde being in Europe. It was said also that when the allotment of the bonds was made Mr. Alexander received those for both the society and for the syndicate members from Kuhn, Loeb & Co., his personal allotment and that of Mr. Hyde being for the same amount.

An attempt was made last night to see President Alexander in regard to the syndicate transaction. He was not at home, but Bainbridge Colby, one of his counsel, said:

"It is a skulking falsehood which nobody would have the hardihood to issue except in anonymous form. It is unqualifiedly false."

PERFECTLY SOLVENT.

In Albany yesterday Superintendent Hendricks of the State Insurance Department made public the following communication, addressed to the policy holders of the Equitable:

"This department is in receipt of numerous inquiries concerning the controversy now pending within the management of the Equitable Life Assurance Society of the United States, New York, and particularly as to the solvency of the society.

"In order to allay the anxiety of all the policy holders I deem it proper at this time to say that in connection with the examination of the society, now in progress by this department, I am at this date sufficiently well informed as to its condition to unhesitatingly state that it is financially sound, and that all its contracts to policy holders are fully and safely guaranteed.

HITS CHICAGO UNIVERSITY.

Dr. Gladden Says It Cannot Be Honest About Trusts.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, May 8.—The Rev. Dr. Washington Gladden, who objected to John D. Rockefeller's offer of $100,000 for the benefit of the Congregational Church's foreign missionary work, visited Chicago to-day and shunned the University of Chicago.

"I know nothing of the University of Chicago," he said. "I have never seen it, and don't care to. But I would never be in any way connected with a school that would accept money from John D. Rockefeller.

"I don't think any school that accepts money from Mr. Rockefeller will ever investigate trusts scientifically. It would not do this because it wouldn't investigate and publish the truth about Standard Oil, which admirably illustrates all the evils of the trust system. No school which takes money from Mr. Rockefeller will be honest in its treatment of Mr. Rockefeller's trust."

HURT IN SAVING CHILD.

Mother Snatches Her from Path of Trolley Car.

Mrs. Amelia Hlocacek of 3,480 Third Avenue, was taken to Lincoln Hospital last night suffering with severe injuries received in saving her four-year-old daughter Marie from being run over by a trolley car. The accident happened directly in front of Mrs. Hlocacek's home.

The woman, with her daughter, was crossing the avenue, when the child started to run across the street without noticing the swiftly approaching car. The motorman tried in vain to stop.

Seeing the danger which threatened, Mrs. Hlocacek dropped several parcels and rushed to save her little girl, who, from fear, was unable to stir.

The car was within a few feet of her when her mother caught her by the skirts and threw her out of danger. In so doing, however, she stumbled, and fell almost upon the fender of the car, which pushed her for about thirty feet before it could be stopped. The motorman was arrested and [illegible] to appear in court this morning.

NAN PATTERSON TRIAL QUESTION NOT SETTLED

District Attorney Jerome Delays His Decision.

CONSULTS WITH ASSISTANTS

Letter Threatening to Kill the Girl and Avenge Young's Murder Sent to Her Mother.

Promised developments in the case of Nan Patterson did not materialize yesterday, and she will remain in the Tombs and in her present state of suspense for some days to come. In the meantime the District Attorney will decide whether or not her case is to be placed before a third jury. Mr. Jerome returned yesterday from his country place, at Lakeville, and lunched with Assistant District Attorneys Rand and Garvan, who have been in charge of the case. Afterward he said:

"In reference to the case of the People against Nan Patterson, I am unwilling to make any statement other than this: My information in regard to the case presents a serious question for my decision, and one which I must decide myself and not permit the newspapers to decide for me. I have not yet decided it."

Prior to this there was a brief conference between Mr. Jerome, Mr. Rand, and Abraham Levy, chief counsel for the accused girl.

"Mr. Jerome," said Mr. Levy later, "has promised me to take up this matter at the earliest possible moment and to give it his full attention. Under such circumstances, there is nothing for us to do but to await his decision. I have bound myself until such time to take no further action."

Among the eighty or more communications—letters and postal cards—that constituted Nan Patterson's mail yesterday was a letter originally sent to her mother, in Washington, and forwarded through her father. The letter was mailed in New York and was signed by "Armedi Beauparler," who said that he would avenge "Caesar" Young's death. "If the jury acquitted Nan," he wrote, "I would have shot her as she left the Tombs."

WHOLE CHOIR DESERTS.

From Episcopal to Methodist Church, Garb, Music, and All.

Special to The New York Times.

PLAINFIELD, May 8.—The vested choir of the Church of the Holy Cross, in North Plainfield, has gone over to the First Methodist Episcopal Church of this city in a body, under the leadership of J. Edmund Skiff, the organist and choirmaster. A more lucrative salary was offered to Mr. Skiff by the Methodists than he received from the Episcopalians, and one of the conditions was that he would supply the choir. The Holy Cross choir was one of the best in this section.

The Episcopalians are much incensed over the way in which they were left without any choir or leader.

The choir appeared at the First Methodist Episcopal Church for the first time Sunday morning. They were robed in the customary cassocks and other garments worn by choirs in the Episcopal churches, and the music was similar to that of the latter denomination. None of the old-fashioned Methodists had any adverse comment to make over the innovation.

LOST LEG ON THE ELEVATED.

Was Pushed Off Train by Guard, Injured Man Declares.

James Stafford, forty-five years old, of 550 East One Hundred and Fiftieth Street, had his leg cut off by a train last night at the Thirty-fourth Street station of the Third Avenue Elevated Road. He says that he was pushed off the car by a guard of the train, which he was trying to board.

While passing under the station, Detectives Sullivan and Kane learned of the accident. They ran up and found the man lying on the platform with his right leg practically severed.

He was conscious, and said that he had called several times for help. An ambulance was hurriedly summoned from Bellevue Hospital, and Dr. Drury took Stafford to that institution, where it was said that he could not live.

The ticket chopper and seller said they did not know that an accident had happened until the detectives arrived.

J. H. MOORE TO RESIGN.

Commerce Department Official to Head a Trust Company.

PHILADELPHIA, May 8.—J. Hampton Moore, Chief of the Bureau of Manufactures in the Department of Commerce and Labor at Washington, has consented to become President of the City Trust Company of this city, and upon his election will tender his resignation to the Government.

Mr. Moore was elected a Director of the company to-day, and will be made President to-morrow.

Spectator at Murder Trial Arrested.

Francesco Odierno was placed on trial in the Oyer and Terminer Court at Jersey City yesterday for the murder of Munzio Ozra, who was killed in Hoboken Dec. 3 last. Anniello Oria, a relative of Ozra, was also indicted. The police were not able to find him, and he was not seen again until he appeared in court to witness the trial of Odierno. He was recognised by a Hoboken policeman and arrested.

Staten Island Trolleys Crash.

Mrs. Dora Davidson, sixty-five years old, of 10 West One Hundred and Third Street, Manhattan, was badly bruised and shocked last night, and about a score of other men and women badly scared and shaken up when two trolley cars of the Richmond Light and Railway Company crashed in a head-on collision at Richmond Road, S. I., between Osgood Avenue and Rouff Street, Concord. Mrs. Davidson, [illegible] of her daughter [illegible] Concord.

MRS. MAYBRICK'S PLEA DENIED

No Full Pardon for Her—Suffers from Broken Kneecap.

WASHINGTON, May 8.—Ambassador Choate has cabled the State Department that the British Foreign Office declines to grant any further clemency to Mrs. Florence E. Maybrick, who recently made application through the State Department for a complete pardon. She was released from imprisonment upon certain conditions, and still is technically under sentence.

Her testimony is regarded as necessary in a civil action of her mother, the Baroness von Roques, to recover money on account of a land transaction. It was to make her eligible as a witness that she appealed for full pardon.

The Baroness von Roques arrived here to-day from New York. Mrs. Maybrick did not accompany her, being detained in New York, it appears, by a fractured kneecap.

At Mrs. Maybrick's home the maid said last night that she was not in New York.

"Mrs. Maybrick hurt her kneecap a month or two ago by a fall," the maid vouchsafed, "but that's not troubling her now. I don't know when she'll be back to New York, but I know she's not here now."

Bigelow Owes $1,549,133 to Bank.

MILWAUKEE, May 8.—At a meeting of the creditors of Frank G. Bigelow, the Wisconsin Trust Company of Milwaukee was elected a trustee. Several new claims, ranging from a few hundred dollars up to $10,000, were filed against Bigelow to-day, and new items are constantly coming to light. The largest claim is that of the First National Bank, of which Bigelow was President. It amounts to $1,549,133, or nearly $50,000 in excess of the sum acknowledged by Bigelow.

Sullivan and Kraus Gain Verdict.

Justice Leventritt in the Supreme Court yesterday dismissed all the suits brought against Congressman Timothy D. Sullivan and his partner, George Kraus, by subcontractors who were engaged in building the Gotham Theatre in Harlem. Sullivan showed that he had paid the contractors he employed, although the contractors had failed to pay the sub-contractors with whom they dealt.

BULLETIN BOARD BETS.

Four Alleged Handbook Men Arrested in Front of Newspaper Office.

Four alleged handbook men were arrested yesterday afternoon in front of a newspaper bulletin board. They were said to be using the racing information posted there as a basis to work on. Detectives Lloyd and Kennedy of Acting Captain Eggers's staff arrested James Powers of 518 West Forty-eighth Street and Charles Chase of 234 West Thirty-ninth Street.

Lloyd ran after Chase from Broadway and Thirty-fourth Street, to Sixth Avenue, up that to Thirty-seventh Street, thence over to Broadway, where the fleeing Chase ran into the arms of Policeman Brady of the traffic squad. The runners were followed by a crowd which greatly enjoyed the excitement. Odds of 10 to 1 were offered on Chase.

Detectives Murtha and McIver of Capt. Cottrell's staff arrested Samuel Davis of 228 West Thirty-seventh Street and Charles Whittaker of 315 West Thirty-sixth Street, at the same place. Many complaints have come to Capt. Cottrell lately from persons who handed money to some person in front of the newspaper office, the money to be taken to a poolroom. If the would-be bettor lost the person would return; otherwise he would not.

LAYERS WIN SKIRMISH IN RACE-TRACK WAR

Open Ring at Belmont Park is at Least Deferred.

NEITHER SIDE AGGRESSIVE

Betting Public Meantime Must Accept Odds Fixed by Bookmakers' Syndicate or Go to Deadline.

The Metropolitan Turf Association, otherwise known as the Bookmakers' Syndicate, seemingly won a victory yesterday in its contention with the Westchester Racing Association at Belmont Park. The racing association had announced that unless eighty members of the Turf Association drew for places in the ring every day a sufficient number of layers, not members of the association would be admitted to bring the number up to eighty.

On Saturday the track managers put their plan into operation, and when only seventy-seven of the Metropolitan layers took positions three outside men were admitted and allowed to make book with the syndicate. Yesterday only seventy-six Metropolitan members appeared. Nevertheless, none of the deal-liners was allowed to move into the "big" ring, and the three who had the privilege on Saturday were politely asked to go back to their old positions and wait until "matters could be arranged." It was said that a truce had been arranged.

Three members of the Metropolitan Association who made book on Saturday failed to take stands yesterday. They are Mark Reardon, D. J. O'Connor, and J. Waldman. This left but seventy-four of the Mets to try issues with the racing people, and there was scurrying around to fill up the ranks. Finally the syndicate found two men who wanted to go on. They were E. J. Bode and "Jack" London. Both were formerly members of the Metropolitans. For the time being they were reinstated as members of the syndicate, which means that the Metropolitan Association will be responsible for their bets. Then the two forces lined up and waited developments. It was expected that four men would be taken from the dead line, but instead came an announcement that matters would remain as they were for the present.

"There may be something doing tomorrow," said a representative of the Racing Association.

It became evident yesterday that the racing people and the layers are in the position of two—boys, of whom "one is afraid and the other dassent."

Neither side shows any inclination to stir matters to a point that will force the Westchester Racing Association to take cognizance of the fact, officially, that there is betting at the track.

A NEW YORK TIMES reporter asked S. S. Howland, a member of The Jockey Club and Mr. Belmont's representative, for a statement concerning the controversy.

"Why, we never have anything to say about those matters," he replied. "We don't take any cognizance of matters in the ring. We don't know anything about betting going on there."

"Don't you know that there are many layers there and that they pay from $5 down every day for their places?" was asked.

"No; we don't know anything about it," replied Mr. Howland, "and we never talk on matters of that kind."

"Can you say to whom the money goes for the layers' privileges? That person might be able to say something about the controversy."

"I don't know anything about it," was Mr. Howland's reply.

Members of the Metropolitan Turf Association acknowledged yesterday that their statement on Saturday that they would make book on the lawn or anywhere else and take chances on being interfered with by the Racing Association was too strong. Had they taken any such steps they would have been put outside the gates as disorderly persons, and such action, it is said, would not have put the racing people on record as recognizing betting.

On the other hand, it is said that the Westchester Racing Association is not very keen in its desire for an open betting ring. This might entail a certain amount of responsibility for welchers that would be costly. In most instances where welching has taken place the bettors have received checks from persons not officially connected with the racing associations.

One evidence of the syndicate's success was shown yesterday by the odds displayed around the ring. Every one of the inner circle layers posted the same prices. At times a few of the layers changed the odds fractionally so as to induce play on certain horses and thus make a "round" book. This was rarely, however. It was said yesterday that the situation is this: If the bettor wishes to avail himself of the protection that the Metropolitan Association affords, he must take what the association will give, whether the odds are based on the horses' chances or whether an arbitrary price is set on which all of the members have agreed.

Another kick came from the Belmont Park layers yesterday. They say that the betting ring is too large. At other tracks, with restricted space in the ring, the bettor is carried along by the jostling crowd and has just about time to fight his way through, money in hand, to the layers' stools, and, once there, he is glad to get his bet down and get out. The layers say that when bettors have too much opportunity for reflection a large amount of money is lost to the ring.

It has been learned that the championing by the Westchester Racing Association of the cause of John Cavanagh in his fight to compel the layers to purchase stationery from him did not arise entirely from regard for Mr. Cavanagh or for the betting public. The association gets a large percentage of Mr. Cavanagh's profits. The figure has been placed at 90 per cent.

WANT OLD STYLE RACING.

Trainers to Petition for a Change at Belmont Park.

Agitation on new lines in opposition to the general plan of racing at the new Belmont Park race course was begun yesterday when the subject of a petition from the trainers for a return to the old way of racing, with the inner rail to the left of the horses, was broached. Throughout the afternoon the smaller horse owners and some of the trainers who are not identified with the big stables owned by the chief stockholders in the Westchester Racing Association's big plant were busy among the horsemen in the effort to learn the general opinion concerning the new track and the so-called "wrong way" of running, and late in the day it was said that a majority of the horsemen favored a return to the old way of racing for a time at least, and would be ready to sign a petition to the Westchester Racing Association.

A number of the trainers are as little satisfied with the straight course as with the main track, and after the fourth race yesterday, when two horses fell, and others bumped and jostled through the last furlong, there was an outcry against the long straight as being the cause of the mishaps. As a matter of fact, one of the horses that fell came to grief in the first fifty yards of the race, and the other trouble was caused by the crowding over toward the plowed part of the track, from which the "path" was removed last week. With the path out of the way, and no inducement for the jockeys to go wide, the one race run over the main course yesterday was run with the horses on the rail all the way, in spite of the fact that they made the last turn running the "wrong way."

NEW FOUNDER FOUND.

Professional Woman's League Acquires a New and Original Member.

The Professional Woman's League held its annual election yesterday. It was the thirteenth annual election. The league found at this late day that it had a brand-new founder. For thirteen years Mrs. A. M. Palmer has been the acknowledged founder of the organization, and it is writ in all the league documents that she occupied this honorable place. But yesterday a new member was received into the league and greeted with acclaim as founder.

Miss Marie Hillford (Mrs. Courtland) is the new-found founder whom the league delights to honor, and yesterday was the first day since the organization she started came into being that she has entered its doors. She has not been willing to come unless her relationship could be acknowledged, so the story goes, but yesterday, having received an unofficial but convincing invitation, with the understanding that all wrongs would be righted, she went, was made a member, took the league oath of allegiance, was duly acclaimed, and the league members who have come into the league in the last ten years, as most of them have, and only know the early history by tradition and written history in league pamphlets, were greatly surprised.

The true history of the founding of the league, as it was told yesterday, began at the big Actors' Fund Fair of thirteen years ago. Miss Hillford, an actress who took part in it, was delighted with the community of interests shown by the professional women of all classes, and suggested to Miss Bertha Welby, one of the league's charter members, the formation of a woman's organization on the order of that of the Lambs or Players.

"Come to my house and talk it over," said Miss Welby.

That was the first league meeting. There was a second at Mr. Palmer's office, followed by a third. Mrs. Palmer became founder pro tem., and in some way continued in office; the annex to the title was dropped, and Miss Hillford dropped out of the league before she had become a member of it.

There was nothing exciting about the meeting except the new-found founder. Mrs. Edwin Arden, the only nominee for President, was elected, and the Vice Presidents were Miss Rosa Rand, Dr. Ida C. Nahm, Miss Maida Craigen, Miss Mary Shaw, Mrs. Soule Parker, and Mrs. C. J. H. Child. "Aunt" Louisa Eldridge always heads the list of Directors.

SEVEN MILK DEALERS FINED.

Fluid in Possession of One Was Half Water.

Seven milk dealers were fined yesterday in the Court of Special Sessions. Justice Hinsdale presided. Sitting with him were Justice Zeller and Wyatt. Justice Zeller was especially severe in his comments on the case of Jacob Schwartz of 141 Orchard Street, who was fined $75. Sixty quarts of milk in Schwartz's possession were found by analysis to be one-half water.

"Selling such stuff is sinful," said Justice Zeller.

Others who paid fines were: Julius Liberman, 183 Norfolk Street, $75, or thirty days; Samuel Friedman, 642 East Sixth Street, $50, or ten days; Max Shapiro, 189 East Houston Street, $25, or five days; Sophia Koslon, 15 Avenue C, $5, or five days; Annie Lauber, 543 Greenwich Street, $20, or four days; Solomon Palerwitz, 72 Broome Street, $35, or five days.

ALDERDICE'S BAIL FORFEIT.

Lawyer, Indicted for Forgery, Fails for Second Time to Appear.

Recorder Goff, in Part III. of General Sessions, yesterday declared forfeited the bail bond of $3,000 given for the appearance of James S. Alderdice, formerly a lawyer at 304 Broadway, who is now under indictment on three counts of forgery in making a false deed purporting to transfer to his sister, Mary Elizabeth Alderdice, title to land owned by Mary J. Oliver. James A. Alderdice, Sr., and Mrs. Oliver, a recluse who had acquired considerable property, were found dead from causes subsequently proved to have been natural, in December, 1903, in Mrs. Oliver's house in Second Avenue.

CALLS POLICE STATIONS AND COURTS UNSANITARY

Magistrate Ommen Stirs Society of Medical Jurisprudence.

COMMITTEE NAMED TO ACT

Fondness for Making Arrests by Police Attributed to Desire to See Names in Print.

After the reading of a paper by Magistrate Ommen, entitled, "Some Observations by a City Magistrate," before the Society of Medical Jurisprudence last night in the Academy of Medicine, 13 West 43d Street, a committee was appointed, headed by the author of the paper, to take immediate steps to make sanitary the police stations and Courts of the city.

Magistrate Ommen said that the disposition of the police to arrest indiscriminately was being overcome through public opinion, but that it was still the easiest thing in the world to get arrested. All one had to do was to ask a policeman his number. The policeman, the Magistrate said, might be further made aware that he was really not the superior of the law abiding citizen, if the papers would cease to publish their names in connection with arrests. Many of them were subscribers to press clipping bureaus. Continuing he said in part:

"If I were Commissioner of the Health Department I would immediately order the closing of most of the station houses and some of the Magistrates' courts. They are absolutely unsanitary. Say a person is arrested either for some trivial indiscretion, or, perhaps, for a serious offense. He is taken to the station house—for example, the Nineteenth Precinct, in West Thirtieth Street, an old, ramshackle building. I believe this is the worst in the city, although Delancey Street, East Thirty-fifth Street, Church Street, and others are not very much better. The air in these stations is foul, and they are so unclean that some prisoners get lifelong diseases, and perhaps blows to their moral natures.

"Saturdays and Sundays in the Magistrates' courts are short days, when morning sessions only are held, and sometimes court is closed by 12 o'clock. If a man is arrested after that time he remains in the station house until 8 o'clock the next morning, and remains in the pen in the court house until the case is called, sometimes until 12 o'clock, which makes twenty-four hours, during which he has received no food or sustenance.

"In my opinion, it ought to be made a misdemeanor for the Police Department to photograph or take the measurements of a man merely charged with a crime. That ought to be done after the man is convicted and form a part of the records of the Police Department of convicted criminals."

Peconic Park Resumes.

SAG HARBOR, L. I., May 8.—The Peconic Bank, which quietly suspended business a week ago, after Frank H. Palmer, its cashier, admitted he had been using its funds for speculation and could not raise $41,600 to make up the shortage, resumed business this morning as quietly as it closed. It is said that the bank officers will lay the whole matter, with the report of the State Bank Examiner, before District Attorney Livingston Smith. A Grand Jury does not meet until late in September, so there is no hurry in presenting the case.

Mr. Root in $1,000,000 Suit.

Ex-Secretary of War Elihu Root appeared before the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court yesterday to argue the appeal filed by Gen. Louis Fitzgerald from the judgment against him for $1,102,310.71, obtained by Morris C. Menges of Brooklyn last year. Menges said that Fitzgerald had entered into a contract with him under which he was to render assistance in obtaining control of the Western Maryland Railroad. For this it was agreed that Menges was to receive $1,000,000.

Twelve Hundred Walking Skirts at $4 Manufacturers' Cloth Clean-Ups

The manufacturer whose business is large in women's dresses and tailor-made costumes always has a quantity of odd lengths of cloths left over at the end of his season's business. Such an instance in the case of four of our largest manufacturers brings today's extraordinary offering.

These manufacturers have taken all the ends of fine cloths—many that are most beautiful fabrics, and include all the various sorts and weaves that the season has brought out—and they have made them up into correctly-shaped, nicely-tailored Separate Skirts, in a variety of styles. Of course, it means a great immediate loss for them, but it cleans up their stocks completely for the season.

The Skirts are in complete lines of sizes, selected by us, while the goods were in the piece—the skirts being made up after we had accepted the offer. The offering comes just when hundreds of women are planning Summer trips, and when handsome, serviceable Walking Skirts are in greatest demand.

The materials include cashmeres, English and Scotch mixtures, homespuns, fine worsteds and many other fabrics.

The Skirts range in value from $5 to $10, all now at $4 each.

Second floor, Broadway.

Boys' White Pique Suits at $2.25 Worth $3.50 and $4.50

We have just received from the manufacturer another collection of these remarkable Suits of pure white figured and striped piques. The lot includes:

Russian Blouse Suits, with sailor collars, in sizes for 3 to 7 years.
Russian Blouse Suits, with Eton Collars, in sizes for 4 to 8 years.
Sailor Blouse Suits, with sailor Collars, in sizes for 4 to 12 years.
Sailor Suits, with Eton collars, in sizes for 5 to 10 years.

The suits are beautifully made of excellent quality pique and would sell regularly at $3.50 and $4.50. With the warm weather at hand they should go away in a jiffy, at $2.25 a suit.

We also have ready another collection of Boys' Sailor Blouse Play Suits, with long trousers. They are made of serviceable blue cotton duck, caps to match, in sizes for 3 to 12 years, at $1 a suit, including the cap.

Boys' Blouse Waists, of excellent colored madras, in sizes for 6 to 14 years, worth 75c, now at 50c each.

Second floor, Ninth street.

All-Wool French Voiles At 50c, worth 75c

These popular Summer fabrics are woven crisp and sheer in the handsome manner for which French manufacturers are famous. No fabric is selling better at the present time for Summer gowns than these all-wool Voiles. But the manufacturer's American agents wished to close out the stock immediately, and allowed this handsome concession.

They are in the most-wanted colors—marine and navy blue and brown. Regular 75c quality, at 50c a yard. Rotunda.

We also have a fine, imported all-wool French Voile in black, but for this the importer insisted on a little higher price, and yet the saving of 20c a yard is quite remarkable on staple goods that will be as valuable next season as this. These are also made in France, and the same fabric is selling almost universally at 75c, crisp and sheer as high-priced Voiles, and one of the most popular grades at this time. 40 inches wide, at 55c a yard. Fourth avenue and Tenth street.

PRESIDENT IN DENVER GETS WARM WELCOME

Guest at Chamber of Commerce Dinner After Day's Travel.

PRAISES STATE'S SCENERY

A Natural Resting Spot for the Nation's Weary, He Declares—Ovations Along Route.

DENVER, May 8.—President Roosevelt was entertained as the guest of honor by the Chamber of Commerce to-night as a fitting conclusion to the day's welcome as he journeyed through Colorado from Glenwood Springs. All towns along the route centred their population at the stations, and every evidence of hearty goodwill was seen and heard.

Senator Patterson, responding to the toast, "The President," said:

"The few of us who voted for another candidate at the last election, if not ready to take on sackcloth and ashes, are at least willing to admit that probably the great majority were wiser than the small minority in selecting the man they did."

At the close of the dinner the President was escorted to the private car Rocket, and immediately retired. The train leaves for Chicago at 7 o'clock in the morning.

The Presidential party arrived at Union Station at 5:40 o'clock. The Chamber of Commerce committee, headed by President Temple, and including Gov. McDonald and Mayor Speer, took Mr. Roosevelt in charge. As he stepped into the street a great cheer rent the air, and the President doffed his hat and bowed, smiling. A battalion of the Second United States Infantry and two cavalry troops of the Colorado National Guard saluted. The President entered a carriage, the regulars fell into line, and the procession went to the hotel.

The President stayed in Colorado Springs a minute to-day. He greeted the large crowd, saying:

"I have just had the honor of being made an honorary member of the Pike's Peak Press Club. I want to thank all of you for giving me the chance of seeing you here and greeting you."

On his second visit to Pueblo the station platform was crowded and the President was cheered heartily. He spoke on irrigation and the scenery, saying:

"This State is going to be one of the places which people from the East and West will come to see and enjoy, to make it one of the holiday spots of the land. There is such a marvelous diversification of natural features in your landscape."

When the Presidential special left Glenwood Springs at 5 A. M. most of the occupants of the train were up, but the President did not rise until 7:45 A. M. His breakfast was served at 8:30, after which he joined the sightseers on the observation end of the car Rocket.

Some fine views of the party were taken at the Hanging Bridge in the Royal Gorge on a ten-minute stop. At the request of the President "Skip," the terrier, was included in the picture.

Hundreds of children carried large bouquets of fragrant lilacs, with which they showered the President as he appeared on the back platform of the Rocket. At Canyon City a dozen huge baskets of flowers were put on board.

PRAISE FOR ARANSAS CREW.

Captain and Mate on Deck Till Last Second, Passengers Say.

BOSTON, May 8.—Some of the passengers and crew of the Joy Line steamer Aransas, which sank off Pollock's Rip after being struck by a barge, arrived here to-day. The passengers had great praise for Capt. Rood, First Mate Crocker, and the other officers of the steamer for maintaining discipline and directing the work of rescue. The officers had the women and children placed in the first boat lowered. The ship was almost under water, the passengers said, when Capt. Rood and Mate Crocker left the decks.

Officials of the Joy Line say that the young woman known on the steamer as Mamie Kelley, who lost her life, was a Boston waitress named Anna Field, formerly of New York.

Forty-eight of the passengers left Providence for New York to-night on the steamer Larchmont.

As soon as President F. M. Dunbaugh of the Joy Line got into communication with Capt. Rood of the Aransas he instructed the Captain to spare no expense in taking care of the passengers.

"Treat them the same as you would your own brothers and sisters," President Dunbaugh telephoned. "See that they have every comfort, and supply them with anything they need in the line of clothing or wraps at our expense."

President Dunbaugh declared yesterday that the accident was another case where the blame could be laid to the dangerous practice of towing heavily laden barges with long hawsers. This practice, he said, had become a serious menace to coastwise navigation, and a greater peril in fogs.

ONE MRS. HOCH A WITNESS.

Testifies Against Husband at Chicago Murder Trial.

CHICAGO, May 8.—At the trial to-day of Johann Hoch for the murder of his wife Marie Waelcker Hoch, Mrs. Fischer-Hoch, last survivor with whom the prisoner went through the marriage ceremony, was admitted as a witness against her husband.

Mrs. Fischer-Hoch, after identifying a bankbook, said Hoch had asked her to withdraw her money. When they got to her house they were met at the door by Mrs. Bauerborck, who said, "Don't go in there, Mrs. Hoch. Mrs. Sohn is here, and she says that Hoch murdered your sister." The witness said:

"I looked at Hoch and said: 'What are you changing color for? If you haven't done anything wrong you should not be afraid.' He said nothing, but sat down on the bed."

While she was in another room, she said, Hoch left, and she did not see him until he was at the police station.

Mrs. Fisher Hoch gave details of Hoch's flirtations with her while her sister lay dead, saying:

"He declared that the dead was for the dead and the living for the living, and that his talking to me at that time did not make any difference."

She had seen Hoch, she said, giving her sister a light-colored powder in some water two days before her death.

The natives were beaten off with the loss of fifteen men killed.

PROPOSED TO SEIZE LOUBET.

Testimony at Hearing of Accused French Officers.

PARIS, May 8.—Five prisoners, including Capts. Tamburini and Valpert, were before a police court to-day charged with plotting against the State and having in their possession military equipment and ammunition.

Several officers testified that Capt. Tamburini had proposed the seizure of President Loubet, the Cabinet Ministers, and the Palace of the Elysée and other public buildings.

The accused denied making these proposals, saying that in a friendly conversation between brother officers who displayed indignation at the system of secret reports, one of the officers advanced the propositions, not seriously, but as an argument, as a capital way of showing disapproval of the system.

The possession of uniforms and ammunition, the accused asserted, was due to a colonial enterprise.

CARNEGIE ON CIVIC PROGRESS.

In Speech at Leicester He Indorses Municipal Ownership Policy.

LEICESTER, May 8.—Andrew Carnegie was present here to-day at the opening of a free library, toward the erection of which he had contributed. In indorsing the policy of municipal ownership, of which Leicester is a stanch adherent, Mr. Carnegie said that instead of giving away valuable franchises which in their nature became monopolies, the municipalities should undoubtedly undertake the work.

"We in the New Land," he said, "are less advanced. Smaller New York has hitherto given away its franchises and has been glad to get capital to meet its ever-growing requirements. But recently we have begun to take a leaf out of your book. In future franchises will be jealously guarded."

In regard to free libraries, the benefit of which has been much debated in this country, Mr. Carnegie said he had enjoyed years of intense satisfaction in this field. "There is," he added, "no greater cradle of pure democracy than a free public library, in which the workman is joint owner with the other taxpayers."

NO APPEAL FROM EXCLUSION.

Decision of Secretary Absolute in Chinese Cases, Court Holds.

WASHINGTON, May 8.—In the case of Ju Toy, the Supreme Court of the United States to-day held that the decision of the Secretary of the Department of Commerce and Labor is final in Chinese exclusion cases.

Ju is the son of Chinese parents, but declares he was born in the United States. He was excluded after a visit to China.

WANTED $12,000 VIOLIN.

Meyer Arrested on Complaint of Woman Who Lent $85.

Albert Meyer, aged twenty-four, of 159 West One Hundred and Forty-third Street, a musician, who, with his wife, is employed in the orchestra of the Hotel Marquis, Fifth Avenue and Thirty-first Street, was arrested yesterday afternoon on complaint of Miss Herminie Emile, who lives in the apartment house 172 West Eighty-first Street.

She swore that on Dec. 28 last she gave Meyer $85 with which to purchase a violin. He told her, she swears, that for that sum he could buy an instrument worth $900. He did not buy the violin, she says, but kept her money.

Meyer did not deny to Magistrate Finn that he received the money, but said Miss Emile gave it to him of her own free will.

"There was some talk about a violin," he said; "I did tell her that I could play better if I had a better violin—a Stradivarius, for instance—but the one I had in mind cost, not $900, but $12,000. It was the one used by Kocian."

Meyer was held in $500 bail.

CHICAGO TIE-UP BREAK; MORE VICTIMS OF RIOT

Stores Make Nearly Normal Delivery Under Armed Guard.

PAINTWORKERS JOIN WALKOUT

First Extension Outside Teamsters' Ranks—Senator Dolliver's Experience with Mob.

CHICAGO, May 8.—The State Street department stores and large drygoods houses sent out nearly their complement of delivery wagons to-day, and transacted business on almost a normal basis. Deputy Sheriffs, armed private guards and police rode on the wagons to defend the non-union drivers. The Sheriff to-night had 1,500 deputies at work. Two policemen guarding a wagon from a paper box factory were among those injuried during the day.

A significant development was the walkout of 150 paintworkers employed by the Heath & Milligan Company. They are the first members of any union not in the teamsters' organization to go on strike in support of the teamsters. They went out because of the delivery of goods by non-union teamsters. The strikers assert that 250 drivers for furniture dealers will strike to-morrow morning. They were ordered to carry goods to boycotted houses.

Strike funds were distributed to-day. Every driver received $10, and every boy helper $6. Hereafter drivers will receive only $7 a week, and helpers $3.

The rioting to-day was of a sharper character than that of Saturday. Three men were mortally injured and a number of others hurt. William O'Day, a negro teamster, fired twice at Albert Enders, who threw stones at him to-night, both bullets lodging in Enders's body. O'Day was arrested. The Hansell Clock Company, O'Day's employers, are not involved in the strike and there was no occasion for Enders's attack.

Wholesalers, particularly in the grocery line, are losing thousands of dollars a day because of decrease in country business. Country merchants have discovered that trade which generally comes to Chicago is being diverted to other markets.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, May 8.—Secretary Shaw and Senator Dolliver passed through Chicago at the same time, and had different experiences. Mr. Shaw saw no sign of the strike, and was convinced that stories of lawlessness were exaggerated.

The other Iowan, having time to spare, strolled down one of the principal streets. He noticed two wagons coming toward him, and 2,000 or 3,000 rioters, who seemed to have sprung from the ground, noticed them at the same time. Mr. Dolliver found himself the centre of a howling mob.

Men were throwing each other down, trampling each other, swinging clubs, and even firing pistols. Mr. Dolliver is of great size and exceptional strength, but it was only by putting forth all his efforts that he was able to keep his feet. He was swirled around like a ball. Finally he managed to beat his way through the crowd, bruised and battered.

Paterson Strike Off.

PATERSON, May 8.—The strike of the teamsters of this city was declared off at a meeting of the local union, held in Columbia Hall. James F. Sampson, business agent, told the men to report for work to-morrow morning under the old conditions. The question involved was a Saturday half holiday with full pay.

PETITIONS IN BANKRUPTCY.

AMERICAN WOOD COLUMN COMPANY.—Schedules in bankruptcy of the American Wood Column Company of 318 East Seventy-fifth Street show liabilities of $5,820 and no assets. It was said that all the books of the company except the ledger, invoice, and bill book were in possession of David Rothschild, President of the Federal Bank, who is in Sing Sing.

FREDERICK H. MONTGOMERY, residing at 5 West One Hundred and Second Street, who was Treasurer of the W. M. Montgomery Ice Company of 511 West Forty-second Street, has filed a petition in bankruptcy, with liabilities of $14,015 and assets of $22, claim for salary against the company. Of his liabilities, $10,015 are as indorser of accommodation paper for the company and $4,000 are secured by a mortgage on 448 West Forty-fourth Street.

JOSEPH BODERMAN.—A petition in bankruptcy has been filed against Joseph Boderman, manufacturer of boys' and children's clothing at 40 Great Jones Street, by the following creditors: M. Schiller & Co., $871; S. Brinn & Brother, $176, and Herring Brothers, $156. It was alleged that he is insolvent, and between May 1 and 5 removed all of his stock, valued at $3,000. He has been in business eight years. His liabilities are reported to be about $8,000.

DAVID ELIOWICH.—A petition in bankruptcy has been filed against David Eliowich, wholesale dealer in china and glassware at 113 Bowery, by Feltenstein & Rosenstein for the following creditors: Jacob Busch, $1,200, on a note; Max Barish, $1,506, for jewelry, and Cohen & Son, woolen dealers, $401, on a note. It was alleged that he is insolvent and since April 1 transfered merchandise and accounts worth $6,000 to various persons. He has been in business since 1888 and said he carried a stock of $20,000. Two years ago he and a friend bought a six-story tenement house at 117 Forsyth Street with a mortgage on it of $30,000, each having a half interest in the property. On April 4 last the property was transferred to Meyer Kalmanowitz.

COFFEE HEART

Very Plain in Some People.

A great many people go on suffering from annoying ailments for a long time before they can get their own consent to give up the indulgence from which their trouble arises.

A gentleman in Brooklyn describes his experience as follows:

"I became satisfied some months ago that I owed the palpitation of the heart, from which I suffered almost daily, to the use of coffee, (I had been a coffee drinker for 30 years,) but I found it very hard to give up the beverage.

"I realized that I must give up the harmful indulgence in coffee, but I felt the necessity for a hot table drink, and as tea is not to my liking, I was at a loss for awhile what to do.

"One day I ran across a very sensible and straightforward presentation of the claims of Postum Food Coffee, and was so impressed thereby that I concluded to give it a trial. My experience with it was unsatisfactory till I learned how it ought to be prepared—by thorough boiling for not less than 15 or 20 minutes. After I learned that lesson there was no trouble. Postum Food Coffee proved to be a most palatable and satisfactory hot beverage, and I have used it ever since.

"The effect on my health has been most salutary. It has completely cured the heart palpitation from which I used to suffer so much, particularly after breakfast, and I never have a return of it except when I dine or lunch away from home and am compelled to drink the old kind of coffee (because Postum is not served). I find that Postum Food Coffee cheers and invigorates while it produces no harmful stimulation." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

There's a reason.

Ten days' trial proves an eye opener to many.

New York's Heavy Batting Demoralizes the Boston Team.

The Boston team utterly failed to come anywhere near duplicating its performance of Saturday in the last game of the series with the New Yorks yesterday, in fact the visitors gave a wretched exhibition in the field and were powerless at the bat. On the other hand, the local men played an almost faultless game in the field, while in one inning alone they gave the best batting display that has been seen in this city for a long time. Beginning their onslaught on Willis after one man was out, five men in succession batted safely, the hits including a triple, two singles, and two consecutive home runs. Five runs were the result of the bombardment and all were earned.

Taylor pitched in splendid shape until the eighth inning, when, according to the decisions of Empire O'Day, his delivery was somewhat wild. Still the Bostons should have been retired without scoring, but an error of McGann gave them a run. Cannell batted safely to right field and Tenney's single to left placed him on second. The best that Abbatichio could do was to force Tenney out at second on a throw by Dahlen, but Cannell reached third. Taylor made a pretty stop of Wolverton's fast hit, and Abbatichio was forced out at second. With a man on third and one on first, McGann played well off his base and Wolverton balled a bounder into his hands. It was a question as to whether Taylor or the runner would reach the base first, but Barclay secured the advantage. McGann threw the ball, however, but it went wild, and Cannell not only scored but Wolverton landed on third and Barclay on second. Then Taylor filled the bases by pitching four bad balls to Sharpe. All three were left by Raymer striking out. The score:

PHILADELPHIA, 7; BROOKLYN, 2.

Good hitting, interspersed with numerous errors, were the conditions which prevailed during the game between the Brooklyn and Philadelphia teams at Washington Park yesterday, and the visitors were successful because their hits were more useful and their fielding at critical moments of an effective character. Notwithstanding the fact that Caldwell struck out ten men he was batted lively at times, but vigorous fielding prevented runners from crossing the plate. Lewis's display at short stop was far from the excellent exhibition he gave on the previous day, while Abbott was the greatest one at fault among the Philadelphians.

Brooklyn's first run was scored by Lewis in the fourth inning. He reached first base of a safe hit, got to second on Dobbs's sacrifice, and on Gleason's fumble of Babb's hit landed on third. He tallied on Bergen's one base hit to left field. Bergen made the second run in the last inning on a strong hit for two bases to left field and Magee's poor throw allowed him to reach third. Gessler, who batted for Jones, placed the ball in deep centre field for three bases and Bergen ambled across the plate. Caldwell then settled down and the next three batsmen struck out. The score:

PITTSBURG, 2; CINCINNATI, 1.

PITTSBURG, Penn., May 8.—Pittsburg beat Cincinnati to-day by 2 to 1, principally by the visitors' errors. A passed ball and an error gave the local team its first run, and the other was batted in. Cincinnati's run was made with a hit, two outs, and Odwell's clever steal home from third base. The score:

AMERICAN LEAGUE.

Greater New Yorks Outplay World's Champions and Win by 9 to 3.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, May 8.—Bostonians ascribe the defeat of their champion nine to-day in a large measure to Unglaub, who was in Ferris's place at second base, but the fact remains that Orth was superior to Young as pitcher and that the Greater New Yorks exhibited a better article of team play. The visitors' first run was made in the third inning, when Kleinow scored on a base on balls. Burkett's muff of Dougherty's fly, and Unglaub's failure to handle a thrown ball.

In the fifth inning Kleinow popped up a fly to centre field. Young grabbed Orth's bunt and threw high over Grimshaw's head. When the ball got back to the diamond Kleinow was on third and Orth on second. Dougherty filed to Burkett and Kleinow scored. Keeler scored Orth with a drive to right field. "Wee Willie" tallied and Williams got to second when Unglaub muffed the latter's fly back of second base. Conroy struck out.

Dougherty and Keeler scored in the seventh inning on good hitting, supplemented by Young hitting Keeler in the stomach with a pitched ball. In the ninth, after Gibson had replaced Young, Orth batted for a home run away down the centre field. Fultz's bunt was missed by Collins, Williams got a base on balls, and Conroy singled, the result of which was three more runs.

Boston's first run was due to an error by Yeager. Their second was scored by consecutive hitting, and the third and last to a double by Collins, Freeman's long fly, a fielder's choice, and a force-out at second.

PHILADELPHIA 3, WASHINGTON 2.

WASHINGTON, May 8.—Washington's ragged fielding and Patten's one bad inning gave Philadelphia to-day's game. Waddell had the local team at his mercy, striking out at least one man each inning, and in the fourth retiring the side on strike-outs. Cross was hit in the face by a hard drive in the first inning and gave way to Barton. Score:

EASTERN LEAGUE.

Woods's Home Run Won for Jersey City, the Score Being 5 to 4.

Jersey City took another game from Baltimore yesterday on the home grounds, but it was by a narrow squeeze. The visitors had the game won in the eighth inning, the score being 4 to 3, but when the local team went to the bat Woods sent the ball over the left field fence for the circuit. Vandergrift, who had previously landed on first by a well-placed hit to centre field, crossed the rubber plate ahead of Woods. McNeil pitched for the Baltimores, and was so effective up to the fatal eighth inning that only two hits had been made off his delivery. McCann, who occupied the box for the locals, began to tire toward the close, and Pfannmiller relieved him in the ninth. The score:

PROVIDENCE, 6; NEWARK, 0.

Special to The New York Times.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., May 8.—Newark could do nothing with Josslyn in to-day's game with Providence, and was shut out by a score of six to nothing. The locals were easy winners at all times after the second inning. Bonno was hit freely and costly errors aided Providence in amassing tallies. In addition to pitching a fine game, Josslyn was much in evidence with the bat, getting two doubles and a single.

"BAD BLOOD" IN BASEBALL.

Pittsburg and Cincinnati Players Leave the Field to Fight It Out.

Special to The New York Times.

PITTSBURG, Penn., May 8.—The game to-day between the Cincinnati and Pittsburg teams at Exposition Park was a bitter affair. Blankenship, the Cincinnati first baseman, and Otis Clymer, the Pittsburg right fielder, mixed matters in great style, and it was with much difficulty that other players were prevented from engaging in a general mix up by the police and umpires. Clymer and Blankenship adjourned to the rear of the grand stand to have their fight out, while 500 fans surged wildly for a good view of the battle, which was not renewed because cooler heads prevailed.

Bad blood has been running between the Cincinnati and Pittsburg players for some time, and it was contended by the Pittsburgs, on their return from Cincinnati this morning, that Blankenship had tried on Sunday to start a fight at Cincinnati by striking Wagner with his fist. This afternoon Kelly was put off the field before the game was a minute old for offensive coaching. Then came the clash. Clymer, the first man up in Pittsburg's first inning, was a close out at first. He overran the bag by seventy-five feet, and Blankenship said the runner had failed to touch it. Clymer then threw off his glove, dashed after Clymer, and hit him in the face with his clenched fist. He did this several times. Clymer did not even put up his hands.

Players from both sides rushed to the combatants and the police came running from the "bleachers." Clymer, H. P. Whitney. Trainer, J. W. Rogers.

KAISER CUP YACHTS READY TO DRY DOCK

Fleur De Lys the Only Boat Which Will Not Be Hauled Out.

MILDEGARCE AT NEW LONDON

Valhalla and Ailsa Go to Hoboken Yards — Thistle, Atlantic, and Sunbeam on the Ways.

With the single exception of the Fleur de Lys, arrangements have been made to dock for final overhauling every one of the eleven yachts entered in the big ocean yacht race. The Fleur de Lys was the only one of the fleet out yesterday. After leaving Manning's yard she took a short run and returned to the foot of Twenty-sixth Street, South Brooklyn, where she began taking on extra ballast in preparation for her ocean trip.

The Valhalla left her moorings at the foot of Forty-second Street, Hudson River, and went to Tietjin & Lang's yard at Hoboken. Later she was joined there by the Ailsa from Jacob's City Island yard, making three of the fleet now quartered there. The Utowana is already dry docked, and the work of refitting her is proceeding rapidly. She has engaged the dock until Friday, but it is expected now that she will be ready to leave by Thursday morning.

The Atlantic also left Jacob's yard with the Ailsa, proceeding to the Morse Iron Works, at the foot of Fifty-fourth Street, for final docking. She was quartered opposite the Sunbeam, awaiting her chance to be raised to the ways. The work on the Apache was finished about noon, and in the afternoon she was put overboard ready for preliminary work outside. Her new sails are all stretched waiting for her trials.

To-day the Hamburg and Sunbeam take her place. The latter has little to be done, being in fairly good shape, but it was considered advisable to run over her and make one of two minor changes. It is thought she will be off to-morrow afternoon late.

Commodore Tod sent the Thistle to Staten Island from her anchorage off the Atlantic Yacht Club quarters at Sea Gate, and to-morrow she will be raised at McWilliams's docks.

The Endymion is on the ways at Teby's with work proceeding on her rapidly. She, too, expects to get away on Thursday afternoon at the latest.

The Hildegarde may remain at New London and be hauled out there, not reaching New York until Sunday or Monday morning. Her arrival will complete the roster of the entries.

BROOKLYN'S HORSE SHOW.

Brilliant Attendance and Good Entry Make Opening Night Successful.

A brilliant attendance of representative people, a high-class entry of well-bred horses, and an excellently managed ring combined to make the inaugural night of the Brooklyn Horse Show pre-eminently successful. Society fancies horse shows, and the Brooklyn exhibition claimed a goodly recognition from the élite.

Popular interest centred in the ladies' pairs and in the high steppers shown to runabout. Mrs. John Gerken carried off both honors. Newsboy scored over Alfred Vanderbilt's Lady Kathryn, with Judge Moore's Lady Gay a close third. Newsboy was driven by Mrs. Gerken with Shopgirl in the pairs. Mrs. Grosvenor's pair, Fascinator and Captivator, and H. L. Pratt's Lady Eocene and Lady Barbara were liberally applauded. Miss Bedford was also well received.

STEAM AND ELECTRIC RACE.

Railway Delegates Told of New York Central's Locomotive Test.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, May 8.—Information was to-day announced to the delegates at the International Railway Congress regarding important trials of the new electric locomotive which is the first of those to be used by the New York Central Railroad.

The test took place at Schenectady April 29 and the electric locomotive was pitted against a steam engine of the Pacific type, which is the most powerful machine used in the New York Central's passenger service. Each train consisted of six cars, and from a standing start the electric locomotive reached a speed of fifty miles an hour in 127 seconds, the steam locomotive being 203 seconds in reaching this speed. Fifteen hundred feet from the starting point the electric train was a full train length ahead.

At the French Embassy this evening Ambassador and Mme. Jusserand entertained the railway delegates.

The German Ambassador and Baroness von Sternburg opened their Embassy to-day from 4 to 6 o'clock, when they welcomed nearly the entire Railway Congress and their associates of the Diplomatic Corps.

PRISONER WAS TATTOOED.

Held for Robbery at Astor Estate in Poughkeepsie.

A man who said he was James Larkin, and that he lived in Woodbine Street, Brooklyn, was arrested by Policeman James Johnson of the West Sixty-eighth Street Station at Seventy-second Street and Riverside Drive shortly before midnight last night. A general alarm had been sent out from Poughkeepsie for three men concerned in a burglary at that place.

Johnson picked up Larkin from the description which accompanied the dispatch from Poughkeepsie. The man hovered about the spot, which the Poughkeepsie police reported had been arranged by the trio as a meeting place at 7 o'clock in the evening.

The description mentioned a rose tattooed on one hand and a star on the other. Larkin's hands were so marked.

Special to The New York Times.

POUGHKEEPSIE, May 8.—James Larkin is wanted here for robbing a house on John J. Astor's place last Saturday night. No important valuables were taken. Two other men are under arrest in this city.

If you go into a Clothing store and buy a Hart Schaffner & Marx suit at a price you ought to pay for it, you make a larger profit than the dealer. He gets the money; but you get the clothes; there's no better illustration of actual money's-worth than a good all-wool suit.

But if you buy the "mercerized cotton" cheat your profit is nothing; the chances are you don't even get what you pay for. That's one reason for calling it "cheat." What profit there is all goes to the dealer; there's nothing in it for you. "Mercerized cotton" costs less than all-wool; but you may even pay more for it.

Get the clothes-profits that are coming to you; ask for all-wool, and get it; you can. Our label is a sign of it: a small thing to look for, a big thing to find.

Coward Arch-Supporting Shoe.

When the trouble first begins, few folks realize the "arch" of the foot is breaking down or dropping out of place. They put down those acute shooting pains which run up the calf of the leg, even to the knee, to gout or rheumatism. Take warning! It's the first stage of "flat-foot."

The Coward Arch-Supporting Shoe containing a metal prop, relieves all pain and preserves perfectly the natural shape of the foot.

SYRUP OF FIGS

Acts Gently;
Acts Pleasantly;
Acts Beneficially;
Acts truly as a Laxative.

Syrup of Figs appeals to the cultured and the well-informed and to the healthy, because its component parts are simple and wholesome and because it acts without disturbing the natural functions, as it is wholly free from every objectionable quality or substance. In the process of manufacturing figs are used, as they are pleasant to the taste, but the medicinal virtues of Syrup of Figs are obtained from an excellent combination of plants known to be medicinally laxative and to act most beneficially. The Sands Are Running Out

May 15 Is the Last Day

AN opportunity is fading away. Soon it will be too late to buy "The Historians' History of the World" at the discount of 43 per cent. from regular prices.

Do you see the fine stream of sand trickling through the hour-glass? Every grain that drops represents a fraction of time that has gone forever. Every falling grain is a reminder of time wasted, of lost opportunity.

No instrument ever designed illustrates so graphically the passing of time as the hour glass. You see time literally running away.

A $5.00 Book at $2.88.

At this moment the hour-glass impresses one serious fact upon the mind. The most useful and interesting work of general culture of the day is offered to you NOW (provided you act at once) at a discount of 43 per cent. from regular prices. That is, nearly half price—a $5.00 book for $2.88.

The Historians' History of the World

From Ancient Babylon to Modern Japan.

(Issued in London by The History Association, and in this country by The Outlook Company.)

On May 15—a few days hence—the discount will be withdrawn and prices advanced.

You know all about this great work. You know that the most distinguished public men and scholars in the country have proclaimed its value. You know that history is the most interesting and profitable subject to read. You know that a remarkable bargain is offered to you. You know that in a few days it will be too late to obtain it.

The Message of the Hour-Glass.

The life of the opportunity, now almost at an end, is like the life of those falling sands in the glass. When the sands have run out that hour will have gone forever, and on May 15 the chance to buy the book will have gone forever. A dawdler can turn the hour-glass round again and waste another hour, but he cannot have the same hour over again, and he cannot have this opportunity again.

Here is a book that you know you want and ought to have, and here is the opportunity to buy it at a bargain. That opportunity is running away before your very eyes. Seize it or it will be gone forever—that is the message of the sands in the hour-glass.

Swiftly and silently the grains of sand are falling, never stopping for an instant, and the moments are running away.

Whether it is buying a book, or buying a house, or changing your occupation for life, there is always a right time to do it. That time, moreover, is always limited. Good opportunities come and go, they never last long. Once lost they can never be regained.

The first opportunity you have ever had to buy a really good world-history is now almost gone. Only a tiny bit of sand remains in that section of the hour-glass that symbolizes a remarkable opportunity! Will you seize it?

The Greatest Story Ever Told.

HERE at last is the greatest story ever told, the drama of the ages, the Protean tragi-comedy of humanity, ever growing, ever changing, ever struggling onward toward the Judgment Day; a story constructed upon the most original plan yet devised in literature, "in its simplicity sublime," the embodiment of one of those ideas that so profoundly influence the course of human events and yet are so simple that one can only marvel no one has conceived them before.

Every fact of value in the history of the world, every phase of man's evolution, every vital period of a nation's existence, is here told in the actual words of a great historian, the inspired one who has narrated it most eloquently and most exactly; and these words are joined together by a directing mind, with editorial links illumined by contemporary erudition, into a narrative of such perfect continuity and artistic symmetry that only the charm of diversity remains to remind the reader of the infinite variety of sources from which it is derived.

A Golden Book of Truth.

HERE are given in generous measure the words of the immortals like Thucydides, "the instructor of our common humanity," and Gibbon, "the creator of the largest historic canvas ever painted by the hand of man," and of more than 2,000 others, either of great worthy of preservation, all the valuable historians, in fact, who have lived since men chipped cuneiforms on granite down to our own day and generation.

The passages chosen are in the main those of men who had the loftiest vision of their task, who understood history to be "the unfolding of the divine idea in time," as Hegel has expressed it. In these pages there is more tragedy than in Aeschylus or Shakespeare, more philosophy than in Plato or Bacon, more comedy than in Aristophanes or Molière, more satire than in Juvepal or Swift.

This is the most splendid of all literature, so fraught with essential truths that its artistic form is but the harmonious setting of a priceless jewel, beyond all other writings, enduring as the everlasting hills and glowing with the life of the immortal mind. This is the very golden book of truth.

THE RAINES LAW AMENDMENTS.

The final legislation in regard to Raines law hotels was much better than at one time seemed possible. The original bill introduced by Senator RAINES himself was considerably weakened by amendment before it passed, and was so delayed that it would have been of no value for the next year. It made inspection by the Building Department necessary before the issue of a license, which could not be issued if the inspection showed failure to comply with the building requirements for hotels. As all the Raines law hotels had received licenses before the bill was passed nothing could have been done under it for another twelvemonth.

At this juncture the friends of the original movement secured the introduction of another bill by Senator AMBLER, which provided that any taxpayer may petition the Deputy Excise Commissioner at any time in due form to have suspicious Raines law hotels investigated, and if they are found not to comply with the requirements of the building law their licenses may be revoked. It is the intention of the Committee of Fourteen, which has been working hard for the passage of effective legislation, to begin a thorough investigation of the Raines law hotels as soon as the Governor has signed the bill.

Gov. HIGGINS is entitled to much credit for the aid he has given in this matter. It was only by means of an emergency message at the last moment that it was possible to secure a vote on the Ambler bill and to prevent the year of immunity which the hotels would have enjoyed under the bill of Senator RAINES. On the other hand, the attitude of the Democrats in this matter has been highly discreditable. They have always protested that the Raines law was a device of the Republicans to secure revenue from the liquor places without any real regard for the evils connected with them. But when a Republican Legislature was ready to amend the law in such manner as to close up 75 per cent. of the hotels, necessarily losing the revenue therefrom, but satisfied to correct the terrible abuses that had arisen, the Democrats from this city, joined almost without exception by the Democrats from up the State, did all they could to defeat the bill. The only possible explanation is that the party in this city cares more for the friendship of the Raines law hotel lessees and for the money to be got from them than for the morals and decency of the community.

THE NEW SUBWAY PLANS.

The Rapid Transit Commission should not be in too great haste to commit itself to the final approval of the plans for the new lines of subways, other than as regards the selection of routes, and, it may be, the general type of construction. There are a good many points which are not yet satisfactorily settled, and concerning which it is possible the views of the engineers may not be as fully in accord with public opinion as would be desirable.

As to the number of rows of pillars needed to sustain the street it may safely be assumed that the judgment of Chief Engineer RICE is a good deal better than that of any layman. It is by no means certain, however, that the public interest will be served by materially increasing the length of station platforms. The only object of this would be to permit the running of longer trains. The present trains are long enough, but they are not frequent enough. If a station was a mile long it would always be congested at and near the ticket box. Such crowds cannot be arbitrarily distributed. The ends of the present Subway platforms are very little used, and if they were still further extended the conditions would not be improved in the least. Local trains of five, or at most six, cars are long enough, but they need to be run under about one-half the present average headway in the rush hours.

In planning the new stations a good deal of attention should be given to ample entrances and exits. In some of the way stations of the present Subway one stairway has to be used for both entering and leaving the station platforms. In some of the express stations, notably at Seventy-second Street and Broadway, the stair accommodations are wholly inadequate and very badly designed, not worse, however, than the rest of the station. The places of limited or narrow sidewalks is understood by the engineers of the board and as far as possible the entrances are to be made through adjacent buildings.

As to equipment, it is perfectly evident that the use of cars with only end openings is fatal to the expeditious handling of crowds. Those waiting to take a train crowd as close as possible to the doors and obstruct the movements of those who wish to leave it. The stereotyped injunction of the guard to "step lively" is merely exasperating. It accomplishes no good purpose partly because those who for reasons of their own wish to step as lively as possible cannot make headway against a throng of emerging passengers or through another throng of entering passengers. The argument that cars must be made with closed sides for structural reasons is without weight. Illinois Central experience, not to speak of that of the Brooklyn Bridge, of the Boston Subway, and many other systems, disposes of it. The best results in rapid transit cannot be had with cars which must be emptied before they can be filled.

It is understood, of course, that the approval of a route does not cover all the details of planning and construction, and that these must be left subject to a great many things which cannot be taken into account at the outset of such undertakings. This is especially true in view of the changes of plans which will be necessitated by the construction of the pipe galleries provided for in the Gardner bill, which passed unexpectedly in the closing hours of the session. However, it is well that too much devotion to established precedent should not warp the judgment of the engineers or blind them to the fact that the original Subway, good as it is and creditable to them as we all consider it, is not in all respects perfect nor in many respects as good as it should be or as another subway can be made.

FRENCH NEUTRALITY.

On April 19 it was reported from Tokio that Japan had addressed a protest to France in regard to the stay of the Russian squadron under ROJESTVENSKY at Kamranh Bay, on the coast of French Indo-China. According to a correspondent at Hongkong, whose report is based upon his personal observation, the squadron did not leave the French harbor until April 25, having for ten days made use of it as a naval base for the complete reprovisioning and outfitting of its vessels. The stores were forwarded from Saigon, the French capital, about 200 miles distant from Kamranh Bay. The work was done under the direction of Prince LIEVEN, the commander of the Russian cruiser Diana, interned at Saigon, and was carried on within French territorial waters. The Russians did not leave until the work was complete and the transports which brought their supplies from Saigon had been emptied. During their stay they had the full use of the telegraphic facilities of the French company.

Without doubt the situation thus created is very grave. It is aggravated by the fact that a similar and even more prolonged hospitality was shown by the French authorities at Madagascar. The stay of ROJESTVENSKY in or just out of the territorial waters of that island lasted for weeks, and even months. In that case it was explained that the Russian Admiral had been repeatedly requested to leave, but that he had ignored the requests. It is of course not to be expected that France should have a sufficient naval force either on the Madagascan or on the Indo-Chinese coast forcibly to extrude a squadron comprising all the effective strength that is left of the Russian Navy. But, on the other hand, it is not to be expected that one belligerent should respect the neutrality of a country which cannot protect itself from violations of neutrality by the other. And that the neutrality of France is collusively benevolent toward Russia the Japanese may be pardoned for inferring from the fact that, while ROJESTVENSKY has skirted the coasts of countries under the control of all the maritime Powers, his only stops have been made at French ports. The indignation and the vindictiveness expressed by the Japanese press are what might be expected from the representative organs of opinion of any belligerent country in like circumstances.

That the Russian procedures amount to a violation of French neutrality there can be no question. LAWRENCE, one of the latest of the text writers on international law, lays it down as the first of the duties of belligerents toward neutrals that "warlike expeditions may not be fitted out within neutral borders, nor may neutral lands or waters be made a base of operations against an enemy." Now, precisely these prohibited actions have been the actions of Russia in French waters. LAWRENCE goes on to distinguish, but there is nothing in his distinctions to palliate the violations of French neutrality. On the contrary. He says:

> A belligerent does not make neutral territory or a neutral port into a base of operations by obtaining in it once or twice, or at infrequent intervals, such things as provisions, coals, and naval stores. The prohibition of the use of neutral territory as a base of operations is aimed at the frequent drawing of stores and equipments from depots situated in neutral territory and always open to the belligerent for the replenishment of his magazines. Each separate supply may be innocent in itself or at most of a doubtful nature. It is their constant recurrence which makes them illegal.
> The continuous occupation of a neutral port for ten days by a belligerent squadron, the full purpose of obtaining port into a base of naval operations, and furnishes the other belligerent with a just grievance, the extent of which depends upon the amount of damage done to him by the facilities thus afforded. It is conceivable that the result of the decisive naval conflict between Russia and Japan might depend upon the aid and comfort received by the Russian squadron through the violation of French neutrality. Already it is unofficially maintained in Japan that Japan is entitled to say that the contingency has arisen in which the British alliance was to become operative, the contingency of Japan's being attacked by "more than one Power." Of course Great Britain would very greatly deplore, all the world would have reason to deplore, any event which would interrupt the friendliness, just now so much in evidence, between herself and France. And France would have reason to deplore it still more deeply. For in fact French Indo-China lies entirely open and defenseless to Japanese reprisals. Not only has France now no such force in those lands and waters, but it is unlikely that she should see her way at any time to maintain such forces there as would safeguard her Asiatic possessions from complete conquest at the hands of Japan. French publicists have been especially active in spreading apprehensions of the "yellow peril." Without doubt it is a real peril for France if she persists in giving ground for such a state of feeling as now exists in Japan, and as France has done at least something to justify. It is to be hoped and expected that the good offices of London will be so employed in Paris in reinforcement of the French official sense of justice and good faith that France will cease to afford any further justification for it.

HOW THE GERMAN TARIFF WILL WORK.

We pointed out the other day that the lowest rates under the German tariff which will go into effect next March would average considerably higher than the rates now imposed, but that the rates which we might obtain by reducing our own were also very much lower than those we now impose on importations from Germany. In other words, if we cannot come to some agreement with Germany we must be content to lose a large part of our trade with that country.

A considerable part of our present exports to Germany are admitted to that country free, such as cotton, of which we export some $110,000,000; copper, oil cake, raw skins, phosphates, and resin and turpentine, which make up a further amount of some $23,000,000. But our breadstuffs, provisions, fruit, petroleum, machinery, hardware, &c., are pretty heavily taxed, and will be still more so under the new tariff. We now pay, for instance, 10 cents a bushel on corn; the new tax will be 31 cents at the higher and 19 cents at the lower rate. Wheat is 23 cents a bushel, and will be either 49 cents or 36 cents. Lard and tallow pay $1.09 per 100 pounds, and may be kept at that rate or pay $1.86. Machinery, sewing machines, hardware cannot be reduced even if we make an agreement.

It is by no means easy to see how we can avail ourselves of even the advantage that would result from a reciprocal agreement. It has been found practically impossible to secure the ratification of a treaty of reciprocity in the Senate, and in this instance it is very doubtful if the House would submit to the change of tariff rates without it having passed explicitly on them. Mr. LODGE thinks that a way out may be found by adopting the principle of alternative rates which already prevails in France and under which Germany is now about to proceed. By that principle what are known as autonomous rates are imposed on imports, generally while lower rates are fixed which may be obtained by countries giving satisfactory reductions in return. In effect this is what was done in the Dingley Tariff bill as to a small number of rates which the President was allowed to make the basis of reciprocity treaties. That was no test of the working of the principle with us, partly because it was on too minute a scale at best, and partly because the Senate soon rebelled and refused to apply it further. To enact the plan on a scale as large as would be demanded to affect German trade would certainly be found extremely difficult. Yet it seems so far the only device with the least promise in it of a solution for the troubles that are threatened since Germany has adopted our own delightful tariff ideas.

WHOLESOME MILK.

The announced purpose of the leading concerns engaged in the supplying of milk in Manhattan and Brooklyn to co-operate for the purpose of fixing and maintaining standards of purity and cleanliness not attainable by legal requirement is extremely satisfactory. Assuming that they mean to do what they say, and that they will follow the advice and direction of ex-Commissioner LEDERLE, who has been retained as the chemist and sanitary engineer of the association, it will be easily possible to change all the conditions of the local milk supply and thus reduce to lower figures than have yet been reached the infant mortality of New York.

That such action on the part of the representative milk dealers may be regarded as probable may be assumed from the fact that it is largely in their Health has been misinterpreted, intelligent, and, if not always successful in checking practices inimical to the public health, has at least succeeded in bringing under the penalties of the law a great many dealers whose competition has been destructive of the business for all who have endeavored to conduct it honestly and with conscientious regard for the interests of those who depend upon milk for sustenance. It is good business policy on the part of a reputable dealer to co-operate in every way with the Inspectors of the Health Department, and to place such checks upon the farmers that the chance of deceiving those who desire to handle only good milk is reduced to a minimum. No dairy should be permitted to ship milk to New York if every precaution of cleanliness and care has not been taken. Those who handle at retail milk of which they know nothing and concerning which they are unwilling to take the trouble to advise themselves must assume the consequences of being the purveyors of material unfit for the purposes for which it is sold. This is no light responsibility. In a circular just issued by the Health Department for the information of dairy farmers it is stated that in 1904 more than fifty-six hundred infants under two years of age died in New York as the result of milk poisoning. Part of this, undoubtedly, was due to the ignorance or carelessness of parents in allowing milk not necessarily dangerous when bought to become so by lack of proper care. Pathogenic bacteria multiply very rapidly in milk when it is kept at atmospheric temperature in Summer. Against carelessness in the nursery it is difficult to contend, for the reason that it appears to be impossible to punish it, whatever its consequences. That the dealers have combined to give the public all the protection possible against dangers from causes they can control is highly creditable and indicates progress toward higher standards of business morality. If the druggists would do likewise and combine to put an end to fraud and substitution, another active cause of infant mortality would be checked.

MOTOR OMNIBUSES.

From current discussion in the English technical journals the interesting fact is learned that the development of the motor 'bus in London has been so rapid of late that it has put a complete stop to the electrification of street lines built for horse traction or other than electric propulsion. The experience of one London company may be briefly summed up as follows: It owns and operates a line of motor omnibuses, each of which cost $4,000, carries 34 passengers, travels 700 miles weekly on the average, costs to operate, everything included, $90, and earns $300, netting an average of, say, $200 per week of profits. This would appear to show net profits of $10,400 per annum per 'bus. If from this a considerable and ample allowance was made for replacement, the divisible profits would seem to be much better than could be expected from anything in the form of an investment in a street railroad.

London experience also seems to show that the motor omnibus has many advantages over the trolley car from the point of view of the passenger. It travels as fast, is less subject to delay, since it can go around obstacles, goes to the curb to take on or discharge passengers, is at all times independent of the vicissitudes of an electrical system, and while a vehicle of this character may break down, it does not impede in any way the movement of other vehicles. The success of the experiment is of course dependent upon good pavements. Our cities need these whether we have motor omnibuses or not.

TOPICS OF THE TIMES.

Two Medical Services Compared.

Writing in The New York Medical Journal, Dr. G. FRANK LYDSTON protests somewhat impatiently, not against the praise which Japan's Army Surgeons are receiving, but at the frequent intimations or implications that the American representatives of the same service were somehow to blame for the wretched conditions that prevailed with such lamentable results in the camps where our soldiers were collected and prepared for participation in the war with Spain. Dr. LYDSTON does not deny that the conditions were bad; on the contrary, he declares that they could hardly have been worse. He does deny, however, and very emphatically, that the superiority of the Japanese service is due to the greater knowledge, skill, or industry of the Japanese Army Surgeons. The latter know their business, he says, and they perform it; our camp troubles arose from the fact that the American Surgeons, who also knew their business and wanted to perform it, were tightly bound in coils of military red tape, and were reduced to comparative helplessness by lack of authority to enforce the rules upon which the safety of the soldiers depended. In the course of his article Dr. LYDSTON makes some decidedly serious charges that, for instance, despite the known insalubrity of Miami in Summer, "a certain railway and steamship line had influence at Washington, with the usual result—the camp was established where it would be of most benefit to the aforesaid line." He declares that it was unusual for a requisition for medical supplies to be honored in less than a month after it started on its weary way through military channels, and he repeatedly refers with ridicule or indignation to the policy which prepared men from the temperate zone for service in the tropics by killing them through overwork and neglect in a subtropical region. It would have been far better, he insists, to have sent the soldiers directly to Cuba, while they had their full strength. While recognizing the merits of the Japanese medical service, Dr. LYDSTON finds it necessary to call attention to several facts which favor the Japanese Army Surgeons by decreasing the difficulty of their task as compared with of these is the simplicity of life to which the majority of the Japanese soldiers have been accustomed, the army rations being for most of them a decided improvement upon their usual food. Then, the Japanese private obeys orders in camp as well as on the battlefield, so that the protection of his health is by no means as difficult as in the case of American volunteers with no great regard for civilian authority, and, as the climate of Manchuria is much like that of Northern Japan, it presents no very difficult problems.

Equal Pay for Equal Work.

New interest has been added to the contest for the Presidency of the Class Teachers' Association by the charge by the friends of the present administration and its policy that the demand for a woman President is made by a group of teachers who are even more concerned about "woman suffrage" than about equal payment for equal work, without regard to the sex of the person doing it. One cannot clearly see either the relevancy or the gravity of this accusation, but there is no doubt of its tendency to add vivacity to the contest, especially as viewed from a distance. But for those not in search of just this kind of amusement it does seem a little hard that the question of equal pay for equal work should thus be complicated and confused. It was quite difficult enough before. Had attention remained fixed on that one issue, somebody might have been sufficiently bold to ask whether there was not to be found in the fact that everybody admits that payment for work should not be affected by the sex of the worker pretty good proof that on the whole and as a rule that method of payment is followed. Of course the apparent exceptions are numerous, and of course they are very trying to the patience of those who feel that they are not justly remunerated, but it must be remembered that "work" is a large word, meaning much more than the immediate accomplishment of a set task. For that, in many instances, women are at least as efficient as men, and in not a few they are more efficient, but while the immediate accomplishment of the set task is a matter of importance, emergencies of one kind and another are always arising when something more is needed, and it is those who, as experience has shown, are most likely to supply strength, courage, and ingenuity to meet the emergencies that get the greater pay for the seemingly equal work. One does not have to be a woman hater to be of the opinion that the injustices of payment for work fall with little discrimination between men and women, and that the latter come about as close to getting what they earn as the former.

Proposing by Proxy.

A letter written in 1852, and now reprinted by The Birmingham (Ala.) News, throws light on a phase of the slavery question that has not received much attention, the phase being the attitude assumed by the slave owners toward the sentimental relations of their human chattels. The author of the letter is one S. J. CHAPMAN, who had for two years employed as valet a negro named JEFF, the property of a North Carolinian, and its object was to win from the lady who owned a certain ABBEY favor for JEFF's suit for ABBEY's hand. The affair is treated humorously but kindly, and with an evident feeling that the affections of the two slaves were worthy of consideration. JEFF, says Mr. CHAPMAN, "having formed an attachment for 'Miss' ABBEY, your servant, and being solicitous of entering into a matrimonial alliance with his Dulcinea, requests me to write a recommendation to you, bespeaking for him your favorable consideration of his application to wed 'Miss' ABBEY. I have known JEFF for the last six years, and Mrs. SHAWVER, your neighbor, knows him well, to whom I refer you if you desire any additional information, to that contained herein. He is a boy of unexceptionable character, remarkable for his honesty, sobriety, morality, and integrity, and, indeed, I may say JEFF has as much character as any slave can have. Should you favor his suit I doubt not but that he would take great pleasure in serving you as the mistress of his inamorata. Hoping that you will sanction 'Miss' ABBEY's choice and allow these sable children of Africa to unite their destinies in the 'silken tie' of Hymen, with consideration, I am," &c. That is a distinctly pleasing communication, and not the less so, perhaps, because the "Miss" is carefully quoted, and no more is claimed for JEFF's character than his status warranted.

CARED FOR THE BERMANS.

United Hebrew Charities Has Spent $85.20 on the Family.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Permit me to correct an error which appeared in the columns of THE NEW YORK TIMES this morning. In a news note entitled, "Boy Heads This Family; Six Children Aided by Neighbors, But Have Hard Fight," you have stated that on the ground floor of a tenement at 62 Columbia Street there was a family of six children, the eldest thirteen years of age, the father having disappeared and the mother in Mount Sinai Hospital, and that as a result of the absence of the parents the children, unable to provide for themselves, were left to the mercy of neighbors, who had paid the rent and made such other provision for their care as they could scrape together.

The facts in the case are as follows: Mrs. Berman, the mother of these children, was removed to the Mount Sinai Hospital by the United Hebrew Charities on March 25, 1905, the society providing a carriage for the purpose. Immediately after the mother's removal a woman was placed in the home as caretaker, and has been there ever since. In addition to this the United Hebrew Charities has paid the rent and has given the family what they needed for living expenses. I need merely mention that since March 25, the date of Mrs. Berman's removal, the society has given to the family, including the services of a caretaker, a total of $85.20.

The Dolphin as a Pilot.

From The London Express.

"Pelorous Jack" is the name of an old dolphin which is protected by a special act of the New Zealand Legislature. The official proclamation of the Government prohibits any interference with Pelorous Jack under a penalty of £100.

According to an old sailor's tale, a shoal of dolphins grounded on the shores of Cook Strait forty years ago, and one of them escaped into the sea. That one, which is now acknowledged to be Pelorous Jack, never left the locality where he lost his companions, and "he is now protected by law as he has always been by sentiment."

The most remarkable fact of all is the reason for the passage of the law, which is that Pelorous Jack acts as a most effective pilot, escorting all kinds of vessels in and out of the French Pass, Cook Strait, always keeping to deep water.

"For years he was believed to be a beluga, or white whale, but recent scientific investigation has shown that he is really a dolphin. As he is never absent from his duties, the proclamation has been received with keen satisfaction throughout Australasia by sailors who have to use the Straits Pass."

English Yachtsman Approves Method of Handling Immigrants.

Lord Brassey, the venerable British yachtsman, who is to be one of the starters in the international race across the Atlantic for the Kaiser's Cup, was the guest of Commissioner of Immigration Watchorn on Ellis Island yesterday afternoon. Lord Brassey is deeply interested in the immigration problem, and is the President of the two leading associations of London that deal with the question. Lord and Lady Brassey arrived on the island about 4 o'clock, and after being shown through the immense establishment by Commissioner Watchorn, declared the system a wonderful one.

The number of aliens examined at Ellis Island yesterday was 6,800, and there were still 5,000 on board ships in the harbor which the bureau had not the time to receive.

"This is truly a most admirable institution," said Lord Brassey at the end of his tour of the main building, "and I shall make what I have seen to-day the subject of an address when I get back to London. I wish that England had just such an institution, for, you know, we get the riff-raff and the scum both ways over there. The deported from America come to England, and the same is true of the undesirable classes on the Continent. For many years I have admired the American policy, and I may add that I look forward to the time when the English-speaking people will be one in the handling of such questions."

Before they left the island Lord and Lady Brassey were entertained at an English luncheon by Commissioner Watchorn.

WILL REACH THE GULF.

Hawley Says Colorado and Southern Can Do It, Despite McDonald.

The Directors of the Colorado and Southern Railroad held practically an all-day session in the offices of Hallgarten & Co. here yesterday, and in the end voted to call a meeting of the stockholders of the road on June 15 to act on the proposed $100,000,000 refunding bond issue. Of the bonds, $17,000,000, to be used specifically in connection with the Fort Worth extension of the road, have already been purchased by a syndicate of American and foreign bankers, of which Hallgarten & Co. are the managers on this side of the water.

President Turnbull of the Colorado and Southern said after the meeting that the only thing definitely determined up to the present time was the issue of bonds. He was asked specifically whether a way had been found as yet to get around the problem presented by the action of Gov. McDonald of Colorado in vetoing a bill passed by the last Legislature for the purpose of allowing the Colorado and Southern to acquire such lines as are necessary for its extension to the Gulf, and replied that the details of the scheme were not worked out as yet. Edwin Hawley, whose interest in the property is virtually dominant, said that the Gulf extension was assured, and that the action of Gov. McDonald would not hinder the project.

The Directors yesterday elected J. N. Wallace, fourth Vice President of the Central Trust Company, to the board in the place of F. P. Olcott, resigned.

UPHOLDS DEALS IN FUTURES.

Not Gambling, Supreme Court Finds, in Board of Trade Case.

WASHINGTON, May 8.—The Supreme Court to-day decided in favor of the Board of Trade of Chicago against the C. C. Christie Commission Company of Kansas City and the Kinsey Company of Chicago, involving the question as to the right of the private concerns to use the continuous quotations of the board. Justice Holmes, delivering the opinion, said the cases were instituted to prevent the use of the figures by the private houses without contracts with the Board of Trade. Of dealing in futures he said:

"People will endeavor to forecast the future and to make agreements according to their prophecy. Speculation of this kind by competent men is the self-adjustment of society to the probable. Its value is well known as a means of avoiding or mitigating catastrophes, equalizing prices, and providing for periods of want.

"While the State of Illinois allows the charter to stand we cannot believe that the pits, merely as places where future sales are made, are forbidden by the law.

"It seems unlikely that the dealings which give its character to the great market for future sales in this country are to be regarded as mere wagers.

"The board has the right to keep the work which it has done, or paid for doing, to itself."

Justices Harlan, Brewer, and Day dissented.

PAUL L. FORD'S ESTATE.

New Worth $227,501.01—Posthumous Child Will Receive $150,000.

Under the statute of distribution the posthumous child of Paul Leicester Ford will receive more than $150,000 of the novelist's personal estate. Surrogate Fitzgerald signed a decree yesterday settling the accounts of Mr. Ford's widow, Mrs. Grace Kidder Ford, who is executrix under her husband's will. If the child had not been born Mrs. Ford would have received the entire estate, but now she will only receive one-third of it, the remaining two-thirds to go to the child, who has been named Lesta Ford.

Paul Leicester Ford was shot and killed by his brother Malcolm just three years ago. Malcolm then committed suicide. The Surrogate in his decree finds that the novelist left a personal estate amounting to $189,033.39. Much of this was in securities which have since increased in value by $5,872. With the income received from the Ford securities since the time of Ford's death, the personal estate has increased in value to the sum of $252,635.22. Deducting legacies and the expenses of administering the estate, there is left a net personal estate amounting to $227,501.01.

FIREPROOF WOOD AGAIN.

Danger Involved in the Removal of Present Restrictions.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Your editorial in Sunday's paper on fireproof wood shows a reasonableness that most of the writers of articles on this subject do not disclose.

The clause in the Building Code referred to says "or wood covered with metal," so there is an alternative.

Suppose that the present restrictions on buildings over 150 feet in height be removed, how long would it be before very considerably more of the interior trim would be of wood? And admitting that such buildings are not apt to be destroyed by local fires, how easy to create enough smoke to cause panic, and perhaps suffocation! Is it wise to let down the bars in New York?

Would it not be far better to place more restrictions of this kind on all buildings of public resort, no matter what the height?

It does not take long, it seems, to forget the Iroquois Theatre and the Slocum disaster. If metals, asbestos, and other fire retardents can be used for less cost, so much the better for the builders, but it is to be hoped that the plaints of architects and others directly interested in the cost of new buildings may not warp the judgment of our lawmakers.

A FRIEND OF SAFETY.
Newark, May 8, 1905.

CAMPAIGN IN TENTS TO REDEEM NEW YORK

Evangelistic Committee May Make Beginning at City Hall.

TO DOT PARKS AND BEACHES

The Rev. Dr. Laidlaw Says That Before 1920 New York Will Be World's Largest City.

"Before 1920 New York will be the largest city on earth, and, considering conditions now, something ought to be done to influence the masses for the better."

So said the Rev. Dr. Walter Laidlaw at a meeting of the Evangelistic Committee of Greater New York, held at the residence of James Talcott, at 7 West Fifty-seventh Street, yesterday, for the purpose of discussing the plans and progress of the movement for evangelical tent meetings, which are expected to be a feature of the city's parks and beaches this Summer. Mr. Talcott's house was specially lent to the committee.

Dr. Laidlaw addressed the meeting, at which representative clergymen of every Protestant denomination were present, on the subject of the city's masses and their religious condition. He brought out facts with the aid of shaded maps on stereopticon slides.

"There are," said Dr. Laidlaw, "nearly 1,100,000 churchless Protestants in the city, according to the survey of the Federation of Churches.

"There are 11,000 more foreign-born persons here than in Chicago, Philadelphia, St. Louis, Boston, and Baltimore put together. If the present immigration keeps up, in two more years we will have more Italians in New York City than there are in any city in Italy to-day.

"Moreover, if every acre of New York City is as thickly populated as the present foreign quarter to the south and east of Fourteenth Street, Manhattan will hold as many people as the entire population of the United States with half the Filipinos thrown in."

Dr. Laidlaw's address was intended to demonstrate how much the city needed the evangelical campaign which is being planned, and also to show the committee that will have charge of the work something of the religious geography of the city.

The primary purpose of the meeting was to elect a permanent Chairman of the Evangelical Committee. A. J. Pitkin, President of the American Locomotive Shops, was unanimously elected. Mr. Pitkin was connected with the evangelical movement in Philadelphia.

John H. Converse, representing the Evangelical Committee of the Presbyterian Church in Philadelphia, spoke briefly on the great success of a similar movement which is now one of the main features of Christian teaching in that city.

"It has become so important," said Mr. Converse, who has done much of the executive work necessary to the success of the scheme in Philadelphia, "that we would as soon think of closing our churches as stopping our tent work."

Dr. Wilbert W. White of the Bible Teachers' Training School, 541 Lexington Avenue, is Chairman of the Executive Committee here. In his report last night he said that the tents which the committee proposed to use in the evangelical campaign would cost about $8,000 each. He said that they already had more than $2,000 cash, with pledges of about $6,000 more from churches of various denominations.

The matter of beginning the campaign immediately at the City Hall has been referred by the Mayor to Commissioner McAdoo, from whom consent is expected. A meeting of the Evangelical Committee, to which the public is invited, will be held at Carnegie Hall next Tuesday evening. Bishop Greer will preside.

EMANU-EL TRUSTEES MEET.

Election of an Associate Rabbi Left for Future.

The annual meeting of the Trustees of Temple Emanu-El was held last night in the Trustees' room of the synagogue, at Forty-third Street and Fifth Avenue.

Action looking toward the election of an associate rabbi to take the place left vacant by the death some three years ago of Rabbi Emeritus Gustav Gottheil was postponed. Action will probably be taken at a special meeting next Fall.

James Seligman was re-elected President and M. H. Moses Vice President of the synagogue and the three vacancies in the Board of Trustees were filled by the re-election of M. H. Moses, S. M. Shafer, and William I. Spiegelberg.

THE REV. DR. MILLARD ILL.

Announcement is Made at Methodist Preachers' Meeting.

The Rev. J. E. Gilbert, Secretary of the Spiritual Culture Society, was the speaker yesterday at the Methodist Preachers' meeting at 150 Fifth Avenue. His theme was "The Spiritual Method of Methodism." He said it was a question if the Methodist denomination was not lowering its standards as a Church through laxity of spiritual habits, and he maintained that one of the most pressing needs of the time is the more careful religious training of children. He said, also, that every President of the United States has had a praying mother.

The meeting called upon Gov. Higgins to veto the Frawley bill to permit sparring exhibitions.

It was announced that the Rev. Dr. Charles W. Millard is a patient in the Seney Hospital, in Brooklyn. Until recently Dr. Millard was the Presiding Elder of the New York District of the New York Conference. It is feared that his present illness is due to a recurrence of a serious malady from which he suffered a few years ago, and his condition is regarded as grave.

No Federal Place for Shaffer.

DETROIT, May 8.—President T. J. Shaffer of the Amalgamated Association of Iron, Steel and Tin Workers denied positively to-day a story that he is to retire from the association to accept either a position in the Federal Labor Department or an appointment as a United States Consul.

DANDELIONS.

Beneath the bough
In mead and wold
They glisten now
Like coins of gold.

And while they blow
Like coins so gay,
Before we know
They slip away

And disappear
And exodust
Till far and near
All critics must

Conclude that they Like coins that gem
The thorny way
Have strings on them.

Amid such enthusiasm as seldom ensues in a theatre the little comedy of "The Centre of the Stage" was played at the New Amsterdam last evening, providing an incidental feature to a revival of "Trilby" which will go on record as one of the impressively successful occasions of the fast waning season.

It came at the end of the third act. The curtain had gone down on Svengali—his red and bleary eyes bulging from their sockets, as he lay prostrate across the table, just as he has lain so many, many times before—and the beautiful Trilby, now united to her Little Billee, and rejoicing at the return of those dear old pals of the studio, Taffy, the Laird, and Zou-Zou. From all over the house came cheer after cheer, and the curtain was raised again and again upon the various characters grouped and smiling across the scene.

But still the noise continued, and as the curtain went up once more the general din was punctuated by the cries of "Speech, speech!"

Virginia Harned started for the centre; Wilton Lackaye started for the centre. Miss Harned stopped; Mr. Lackaye stopped.

He who hesitates is lost. The curtain descended before either of them had time to make another move.

Then once more the welkin rang. Once more the curtain rose. And the cries for a speech continued. And once more Virginia Harned started toward the centre. And once more Mr. Lackaye did likewise. And, incidentally, they both paused once again.

Another time the descending curtain hid from view these rivals for forensic honors.

In the annals of the theatre this question will go down along with that historic query of "The Lady or the Tiger?" Whom did the audience want to speak the speech? No names were mentioned in the general outcry, but when the little comedy was being repeated Miss Harned gracefully withdrew from the stage, motioning to Mr. Lackaye that he must respond to the demand.

And then Svengali, newly raised to life, through the magic of applause, expressed in a few well-chosen phrases his appreciation, the company's appreciation, and the appreciation of the management for what he described as a testimony to the judgment and affection which all felt for the late A. M. Palmer, through whose efforts "Trilby" was first translated from her proud position at the head of the list of best sellers to the stage which she so charmingly and so continuously adorned.

That this partial whiff proved a popular one there seems no reason to doubt, but last night's performance serves to prove several other facts as well. To begin with, the "Trilby" of Paul Potter is an extremely good acting play. Never in any sense truly dramatic, its characters are so interesting and its story so replete with that indefinable something which we call "heart interest" that the play has an appeal even for those of us who like to think that we are too sophisticated to be carried along on what is merely a theatrical wave rather than a genuine current from the great ocean of life.

There were moments last night when Mr. Lackaye seemed too obviously leading up to his big climax, and throughout his last scene in the third act his method of playing with his back to the audience conveyed the impression that he was already made-up for the death scene and did not dare to show his face until the final moment, but in the main his performance was as colorful and as impressive as in the time of his triumph, ten years ago.

Miss Harned has never seemed the ideal Trilby in appearance, but she plays the rôle in such a way as to bring out most of its contrasts.

The Laird of John Glendenning, the Taffy of Max Beerbohm, and the Zou Zou of Leo Dirichstein again seemed to have stepped forth from Du Maurier's pages. And to these, the "originals" in the original "Trilby" cast must be added the name of Mathilde Cottrelly, whose Mme. Vinard is one of the most wholesome and welcome personalities of all.

E. W. Morrison plays Gecko well, though he does not succeed in effacing the memory of Robert Paton Gibbs, probably the best exponent of the rôle our stage has seen. In the present cast the one weak spot is William Courtenay, who struggles with little avail against a personality entirely unsuited to the rôle of the gently sympathetic "Little Billee."

MISS HASWELL IN 'THE LIARS.'

Fawcett Company in Jones Play at the American.

The George Fawcett Stock Company made its second production last evening at the American Theatre, presenting Henry Arthur Jones's comedy, "The Liars." Again Percy Haswell was the star of the occasion, but this week found opportunity to appear in a different light—that of a comedienne. She was cast to play the rôle of Lady Jessica Nepean, and at once won her audience. She also made a pretty stage picture in the many smart gowns that she wore.

In the support were a number of players familiar to theatregoers. Chief among them was Edwin Arden, who played the part of Edward Falkner, and his work found much favor with the house. Another player who received a warm welcome was Laura McGilvray, late of Mrs. Fiske's forces, who appeared as Lady Rosamund. Bijou Fernandez also was well received. Frank Gilmore as Sir Christopher and Dodson Mitchell as Gilbert Nepean both were applauded.

Mention should be made of the setting of the play. The first act, the interior of a pavilion, was especially effective. For next week Mr. Fawcett announces Jacob P. Adler as Shylock in "The Merchant of Venice," supported by Miss Haswell as Portia.

King Edward Praises Maxine Elliott.

LONDON, May 8.—King Edward and his suite occupied the royal box at the Lyric Theatre to-night, witnessing Maxine Elliott's performance in "Her Own Way." His Majesty led the applause throughout the evening. At the close of the play he said he wished to see Miss Elliott, and she entered the royal box. The King complimented her on her performance, and spoke in flattering terms of the talent America is sending to England this season.

Students Play "Jeanne D'Arc."

An artistic rendering of Maud Menefee's poetic drama, "Jeanne D'Arc," was given last Saturday evening in French by the students of the Le Baron-Drumm School, 40 West Seventy-second Street. The play traces the life of the Maid of Orleans up to the time of the crowning of the King at Rheims, and is interspersed with songs and dances of the period.

QUINCY ADAMS SAWYER.

Rural Play, Elaborated, Seen at the Academy of Music.

"Quincy Adams Sawyer" returned to the city last evening, enlarged and elaborated to fit the big stage of the Academy of Music, where the rural drama is to have an indefinite run. The present production, however, is specially featured in that it is presented on a large scale, both as to the number of players and the setting.

Of the players, Helaine Hadley as Alice, the blind girl, won the particular favor of the audience. James Thatcher was pleasing in the title rôle, while Sadie Connolly as Mrs. Crowley, the rollicking "Irish Angel," and Raymond Chase as Hiram Maxwell made good in comedy rôles.

MARGUERITA SYLVA RETURNS.

Has Been Studying at Monte Carlo for Grand Opera.

Marguerita Sylva, who spent the Winter at Nice and Monte Carlo, has returned home. While abroad Miss Sylva occupied her time in study for grand opera under Mme. Deschamps-Jehin at Monte Carlo.

She returns to America at this time to fulfill a short engagement in vaudeville. After spending the Summer at her country place at Lake Mahopac, N. Y., Miss Sylva will return to Paris and London for another year's study.

Russian Players at Murray Hill.

The Orlneff-Nasimoff company of Russian players, whose performance of "The Chosen People" was reviewed at length in THE TIMES several weeks ago, began a limited engagement at the Murray Hill last evening in "The Son of Ivan the Terrible," a play new to this city. It will be reviewed in these columns later in the week. The company, which was exiled from St. Petersburg, was received with much enthusiasm when it appeared in a Broadway theatre, and since that time has given its performances to crowded houses at a lower east side playhouse.

"The Three Guardsmen," founded on Alexander Dumas's stirring romance, was presented before two large audiences at the Proctor Fifth Avenue Theatre yesterday.

Keller the magician began a week's engagement at the Metropolis last night.

"Faust" was revived yesterday by the Yorkville Theatre stock company. Anne Sutherland was seen as Marguerite. The production was elaborately staged.

Chassino was the special attraction yesterday at Keith's. As a second feature, Dida, the aquatic wonder, proved as much of a mystery as ever. Among others were James Morton, the Maghani Family, and "A Night in Venice."

The ever-popular "Buster Brown" opened a brief engagement at the Fourteenth Street Theatre last evening. Buster and Tige received a warm welcome.

James K. Hackett was the attraction last evening at the Grand Opera House. He appeared in "The Fortunes of the King," in which he appeared during the Winter at the Lyric.

Peter Dailey and his Eight Lulu Girls were the chief entertainers yesterday at Hurtig & Seamon's. Toby Claude also was on the bill. Other performers were Dean Edsall, the Howard Brothers, and Elmer Tenley.

"Dorothy, Queen of Hadden Hall" was the offering yesterday of the stock company at Proctor's One Hundred and Twenty-fifth Street Theatre. Beatrice Morgan played the part of Dorothy.

The musical attractions that remain are Jeff De Angelis in "Fantana" at the Lyric, Sam Bernard in "The Rollicking Girl" at the Herald Square, and Frank Daniels in "Sergeant Brue" at the Knickerbocker.

The plays that remain are David Warfield in "The Music Master" at the Bijou, "The Heir to the Hoorah" at the Hudson, Marie Tempest in "The Freedom of Suzanne" at the Empire, Alice Fischer in "The School for Husbands" at Wallack's, "The College Widow" at the Garden, "The Firm of Cunningham" at the Madison Square, and Ethel Barrymore in "The Doll's House" at the Lyceum.

FIELD LIBRARY SOLD.

Extra Illustrated Books and Fine Bindings Go at Auction.

The valuable library of the late William Evarts Field of Boston, one of the founders of the Club of Odd Volumes and an ardent book lover, was sold at auction yesterday by the Anderson Company, 5 West Twenty-ninth Street. Mr. Field's library was notable for its large number of illustrated books. His particular hobby was extra illustration and fine bindings.

It was while he was on his way to England to superintend the binding of his favorite works of Thomas Frognall Dibdin that he died at sea March 9, 1892. His sudden death prevented his plans to insert in his books a great number of rare portraits, plates, and autographs which he had collected for that purpose. His Dibdins formed the most interesting feature of the sale. Some of them were as follows:

"Tour in France and Germany," the original three 8vo volumes, London, 1821, extended to four volumes by the insertion of 147 portraits and plates. There are portraits, among others, of Joan of Arc, Melanchthon, Dante, Leonardo da Vinci, Boccaccio, Francis I., Marguerite de Valois, Correggio, Gutenberg, Durer, Napoleon, Ney, Louis XVIII., and Dr. Johnson. Three illuminated miniatures from a "Book of Hours" are also inserted. The work fetched $180.

A collection of more than 400 rare portraits and engravings to further extra-illustrate the above. There are portraits of Cardinal Borromeo, Coligny, Diana of Poictiers, Frederick Duke of Saxony, by Durer; Fust, Luther, Luther's wife, Leo X., Louis XVI., Marie Louise, Napoleon as First Consul, Napoleon II., as King of Rome and as Duke de Reichstadt, Marie Antoinette, Rembrandt, Robespierre, Rousseau, Rubens, and General Wolfe. The lot sold for $71.

"Bibliomania; or, Book-Madness," two volumes, large paper copy, London, 1842, extended to four volumes by the insertion of 298 portraits and 23 engravings, also two autograph letters of the author. Among the portraits are those of Dibdin, Aldus Manutius, Lord Bacon, Roger Bacon, Charles the Bald, Catherine Parr, Cervantes, Charles V. Cowper, Cranmer, Queen Elizabeth, Edward VI., John Evelyn, Benjamin Franklin, James I., Laud, Milton, Newton, Roger Payne, Petrarch, Pope, and Dick Whittington. This brought $280.

Peter F. Cunningham's "Story of Nell Gwyn," first edition, extended to two volumes, post 8vo, by the insertion of 152 portraits and 11 views on copper, $362.

Fine copy of the original edition of the famous Nuremberg Chronicle, printed in 1493 by Anthonius Koberger, $201.

John Ruskin's works, ten volumes, $210.

"The Compleat Angler," by Isaak Walton and Charles Colton, fine uncut copy of Pickering's 1836 edition, extra illustrated and extended from two to four volumes by the insertion of 131 fine plates, $220.

TORCHLIGHT PARADE TO HONOR SCHILLER

6,000 Enthusiastic Germans in the Brilliant, Tuneful Line.

ENVOYS REVIEW MARCHERS

"Star-Spangled Banner" in German, at Kommers Afterward—Reception for Guests at the Savoy.

O sagt, ob das Banner mit Sternen besaet't,
Ueber'm Lande der Freien und Braven noch weht.

This was a part of the chorus of the German version of "The Star-Spangled Banner" which was sung at a spirited Kommers last night at the Terrace Garden after the big German torchlight parade up Fifth Avenue, to celebrate the Schiller centenary. And they sang it as loudly and as gleefully as ever Germans sang "Die Wacht am Rhein."

The parade itself was a fine torchlight procession, containing 6,000 members of the German societies in Greater New York, with flaming flambeaux, flying banners, and bands a-playing. It formed the main feature of last night's programme for the three-day celebration of the Schiller centenary that will come to a climax and finish to-night, the anniversary day of the great poet's death.

It was followed by indoor festivities in a dozen places. Principal among these were a luncheon and reception given at the Savoy by the arrangement committee to the guests of honor who had viewed the parade from the balcony of that hotel and the "Kommers." In that there participated 1,200 members of the United German Societies of the City of New York.

The parade formed at Forty-second Street and Fifth Avenue, and marched from there past the Hotel Savoy to Seventy-second Street, then to Madison Avenue, and down to Sixty-second Street, where disbandment took place.

From the balcony that runs along the second floor of the Savoy Fifth Avenue seemed to have been turned into a stream of fire, for fully one-third of the paraders carried torches. The flags and banners and standards in endless numbers belonging to the 200 and odd societies that had sent delegations were massed together in groups at the head of each one of the ten divisions, producing a more striking effect than if they had been strung out along the line. Nearly two score of bands furnished the music—too much music, in fact, for at times two bands followed within fifty feet of each other.

After a squad of mounted police rode the Grand Marshal, Carl Stolberg, with his two adjutants, August Kah and C. Albrecht. They were followed by members of the Parade Committee in carriages. The first division, headed by Marshal Heinrich Pfeiffer, contained German veterans. The most observed and most applauded feature of the parade came in the second division, headed by Marshal Edward Bergmann, and including members of the Low German Festive Society and the Harlem Independent Rifle Corps.

It consisted of a splendid car symbolizing "The Camp of Wallenstein," or the first part of Schiller's famous dramatic trilogy "Wallenstein." There was only one more float in the parade. It was furnished by the Mary Hill Swabian Society, which formed part of the Fourth Division, and illustrated Schiller's poem "The Bell."

The Third Division was made up entirely of members of the New York Turn Society, headed by Marshal Karl Ebetsch. Members of some thirty singing societies marched in the Fourth Division, headed by Marshal Herman Hadermann. The Fifth Division was made up of rifle clubs, and was led by Marshal Theodore Baumhenn. Marshal Karl Neu led the next division, composed of members of a dozen "Volksfest-Vereine." The last four divisions contained members of many societies, were headed by Marshals G. A. Winter, August Hoebermann, Paul Huhn, and Albert Scharschmidt. It took the parade forty minutes to pass the reviewing point.

Among those who viewed the parade from the balcony of the Hotel Savoy were Counselor von Dem Busche of the German Embassy at Washington, Consul General Carl Bunz, Counselor of Legation C. Gheist, Count Bodine Zicho, Secretary to the Austrian Embassy at Washington; Baron Wenkheim of the same embassy, Consul General Thomas von Dessewffy of Austria-Hungary, Consul Jacob Bertschmann of Switzerland, Carl Schurz, Dr. A. H. C. Anderson, honorary President of the General Committee on Arrangements; Dr. Albert J. W. Kern, President of the same committee; Dr. Abraham Jacobi, William J. Baer, the sculptor; Herman Ridder, Edward Uhl, and George Van Skal of The Staats-Zeitung; George Ehret, Congressman Jacob Ruppert, Jr., Carl Beck, Hubert Cillis, Borough President Fornes, Prof. William H. Carpenter, Prof. William Hallock, and ex-Sheriff H. Tamsen.

President Richard Mueller of the New York Union of German Warriors presided at the "Kommers" at the Terrace Garden.

CELEBRATE AT BERLIN.

Honor for Schiller in All Parts of the German Empire.

BERLIN, May 8.—Reports reached Berlin to-night from all parts of the empire of enthusiastic celebrations of the centenary of Frederick von Schiller's death. Most of the cities held preliminary celebrations this evening. The more formal observances will be to-morrow. The chief meeting in Berlin this evening was in the hall of the Philharmonic, which was packed to its fullest capacity.

Prof. Burbach gave an address and Ludwig Fulda read a eulogistic poem on Schiller. Prof. Siegfried Ochs, with the Philharmonic chorus, rendered Schiller's "Hymn of Joy" from Beethoven's Ninth Symphony. The Royal Hochschule for Music also held a celebration with a musical programme. Several other large meetings were held.

The Faculty and friends of the Charlottenburg Technical Institute held a celebration which was not attended by students, who, owing to disciplinary differences with the Faculty, celebrated with a great kommers in a brewery. There were 2,500 persons present.

Meetings were held in Dresden, Leipsic, Munich, Stuttgart, Mannheim, and many other cities. The Stuttgart Council voted money for a Schiller monument.

The newspaper everywhere in Germany print articles eulogizing Schiller or giving a history of events and persons connected with the poet.

A Schiller exhibition has been opened in Berlin, showing furniture and other articles used by the poet.

Quixote Celebration in Spain.

MADRID, May 8.—The tercentenary of the publication of "Don Quixote" was observed to-day as a holiday throughout the country, with floral festivals and the unveiling of monuments to Cervantes. The streets of Madrid swarmed with sightseers. An academic festival at the Royal Academy was the feature of to-day's programme.

New Acts at the Hippodrome.

The Hippodrome again last night did not have a vacant seat in its vast auditorium. There were a number of new acts put on in addition to the regular entertainment. Ferry Courey, a musical clown, appeared for the first time, the Clark Brothers put on a juggling act, and Marceline won laurels with some new comedy.

New Playlet for the Madison Square.

"Mrs. Battle's Bath," a one-act playlet, will have its first metropolitan production this evening as a curtain-raiser to "The Firm of Cunningham" at the Madison Square Theatre. The two rôles will be interpreted by Dorothy Donnelly and Hassard Short. The scene is laid in Newport.

Mosquitos Come from New York and Jersey Gets the Blame.

Ezra William Bigbee, who works on one of the Standard Oil Company's tank steamers, was sitting on the deck at Elizabethport cleaning up his shore-going togs with kerosene when a big mosquito landed on the nape of his neck.

"Scat!" said Ezra, with action to suit.

He removed the remains of the mosquito from his neck and holding it on the point of his forefinger addressed it in terms appropriate. Suddenly he stopped.

"Gosh!" he ejaculated. "That ain't no Jersey mosquito!"

He dipped one of his fingers into cold oil and held it up in the air.

"Wind's comin' fair off them Staten Island swamps. Think o' the cheetiness o' them New Yorkers. Make fun o' our 'skeeters, then when all the Elizabeth 'skeeters is driv out send over Noo York 'skeeters to keep the joke rollin'. Hey, Bill, do you see stripes on the tail o' that 'skeeter?"

"Sure," said Bill, who, like Ezra, has the interests of his native State at heart, "yaller stripes."

"It's a Tammany bird," said Ezra. "I said to Mirandy last night: 'Mirandy, you sure the dog hain't got fleas?' 'Naw,' ses she, 'It's them pesky airhens, Ezra.' Mirandy wus right. They wus 'skeeters, an' they're comin' f'm Richmond. Me to the Board o' Health."

An hour later Ezra William Bigbee and Bill Tietjens, as witness, called upon Dr. Lewis Richards, the health officer of Elizabeth, and laid their complaint before him, also a piece of fly-paper upon which were fastened by the legs about a dozen Tammany mosquitos. The fly-paper was not admitted in evidence, but Ezra's complaint was received and added to numerous ones which had already been entered about the invasion of Jersey by Greater New York mosquitos.

CATHOLIC WOMEN MEET.

Archbishop Tells Daughters of the Faith of Divorce Evil.

The Episcopal residence of Archbishop Farley was the scene yesterday afternoon of a brilliant gathering of women prominent in New York society. They were invited by the Archbishop to discuss the brief of Pope Pius X. approving of Miss Eliza O'Brien Lummis's organization, Daughters of the Faith.

The Archbishop's guests were received by Mrs. John Duncan Emmet, assisted by Countess Annie Leary and others. Mrs. John W. Mackay and the Princess Colonna, who is in Washington, sent regrets.

Among the guests were Mme. de Barrie, Miss Marie de Barrie, Mrs. Morgan O'Brien, Miss Sadlier, Mrs. Manson Renshaw Jones, Mrs. E. H. Montgomery, and Miss Dillon.

"The Pope's brief," said the Archbishop, "states explicitly the need of such an organization as the Daughters of the Faith to cope with every increasing evil of the present day. The whole Christian world recognizes the havoc divorce is playing in the life of the American Nation. We lead the world in the laxity of the marriage vow.

"It lies with our women—Catholic women—to stem the tide by creating healthy public sentiment through united action of those of station and influence in discountenancing the social usages and customs that are the evident cause of the spread of moral evil in society—immoral plays and books, extravagant and immodest dress, gambling, and opiates."

MINISTER BOWEN HERE.

To Go to Washington in a Week on Loomis Matter.

Herbert W. Bowen, American Minister to Venesuela, who some time ago reported charges against Assistant Secretary of State Francis B. Loomis, arrived in New York yesterday morning on the Red D liner Philadelphia from Porto Cabello. Mr. Bowen comes home in response to a request of the President, who wishes him to show what grounds he has for the charges. Mr. Bowen on his arrival went to his home, in the Oranges, where he will remain for a week before going to Washington, that being the time set by Secretary of War Taft.

Of the charges Mr. Bowen refused yesterday to say a word, adding that he thought the first talking he did should be to the proper authorities in Washington.

WHAT IS DOING IN SOCIETY.

This week will be dull socially. There is very little in town at this season of the year, though last week the two coaching parades made things a bit lively. This week, however, there is not even a single wedding of fashionable interest. The arrivals and departures on the ocean liners are of some moment, but the taking of a voyage to Europe attracts as little attention these days as the return to Palm Beach or the West, and the fashion of going to see one's friends off—unless they are going for a stay of a year or two—no longer obtains.

Invitations have been issued for the wedding of Miss Helen Pickering Russell, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Russell, to C. Russell Auchincloss, son of Mr. and Mrs. John W. Auchincloss, at Middletown, Conn., on Thursday, May 25. Miss Russell's maid of honor will be Miss Elizabeth Auchincloss, sister of the prospective bridegroom. The bridesmaids will be the Misses Evelyn, Ruth, and Maude Jackson, Miss Edith Kent Sanger, Miss Mary Cozzine Lefferts, and Miss Emily H. Grogan of New York. Mr. Auchincloss's best man will be his cousin, Charles C. Auchincloss, and the ushers will be Samuel Russell, Jr. and T. Macdonough Russell, brothers of the bride-to-be; Gustav Schwab, Jr., Clive Du Val, A. Douglas Dodge, Joseph E. Thomas, Jr., John Grenville Bates, who married Miss Anita Bouiton a year ago, and Mr. Auchincloss's younger brother, J. Howland Auchincloss.

The plans for the wedding of Miss Wells and Harry Peters have again been altered. The date first selected was June 27 and the place Newport. A few days ago Mrs. Wells announced its postponement until next Autumn, owing to her illness and enforced departure for Europe. The last plan, however, is to the effect that the ceremony will be performed on May 25 in St. Thomas's Church, this city. It is probable that both Mr. and Mrs. Peters will go abroad with Mrs. Wells.

There will be a sale this afternoon at Mrs. Richard Irvin's, 1 West Thirty-ninth Street, for the benefit of the Children's Cottage of the Loomis Sanatorium for Consumptives. Cakes and home-made goodies will be offered and a large number of young girls not yet out will be in charge, among them the Misses Suzanne Henning, Nathalie Bailey, Harriet Alexander, Hilda Hiss, Matilda Coster, Gladys Roosevelt, Cornelia Landon, and Dorothy Weir.

The presentation of the comedy "The Gray Mare" by well-known society amateurs last night at the Carnegie Lyceum for the benefit of the Frances Home was well attended. Those taking part included the Misses Lillian Morrison, Jean Arnot Reid, Ruth Hubbell, Kathryn E. Fisher, and Evert Janssen Wendell, Jacob Wendell, Jr., Langdon Geer, Alfred Brandt, and Walter Dennett. Mrs. H. McK. Twombly, Mrs. Frederic J. de Peyster, Mrs. Charles B. Foote, Mrs. Howard Mansfield, and others were patronesses.

Miss Mabel McAfee will have as her attendants at her marriage to Lewis Butler Preston Miss Lida Burpee of Waterbury, Conn., and Miss Neville Moberly of Lexington, Ky.

POLICY SHEET WRITER TELLS OF THE GAME

Testifies in Brooklyn Against Stephen O'Brien.

GETS SIX MONTHS HIMSELF

Abbott, Arrested 30 or 40 Times, Says He Was Defended Each Time by Luke D. Stapleton.

Stephen O'Brien, who was referred to in a charge made by Judge Aspinall to the Kings County Grand Jury last month as one of the leaders in the policy business in Brooklyn, was placed on trial yesterday in the Kings County Court. The first witness against O'Brien was Charles Abbott, who pleaded guilty to policy playing a couple of weeks ago and was sentenced to serve six months in the penitentiary.

When Abbott was called to the stand he said that he was employed by O'Brien fifteen years ago as a "lookout," at a salary of $6 a week. Four months later O'Brien had employed him as a sheet writer and gave him $12 a week. Since then his salary had been the same. When O'Brien first employed him, he said, it was agreed that if Abbott were arrested in connection with the policy business O'Brien would get bail for him and employ counsel for his defense. He had been arrested thirty or forty times.

"Did O'Brien get a lawyer for you every time?" asked District Attorney Clarke.

"Yes, Sir, every time," answered the witness; "it was the same attorney."

"Who was the attorney?"

"Luke D. Stapleton."

Mr. Stapleton is defending O'Brien.

Abbott said further that two years ago the New York policy headquarters were transferred from 42 Bowery, Manhattan, to 159 High Street, where O'Brien's establishment was maintained.

"The police chased them up, so they thought Brooklyn would be a safer place to do business," he said.

William Warren and John M. Master, both of whom are serving sentences for policy playing, corroborated Abbott. The case will be continued to-day.

MURPHY MAY CAUSE SPLIT.

Threats to Punish Senators Not Taken Seriously, However.

If Charles F. Murphy should attempt to carry out his threat to punish Senators Fitzgerald, Foley, Riordan, Martin, and Hawkins for their action in voting against the Eighty-cent Gas bill, the prediction is being made by some Tammany politicians that there will be a break between him and Timothy D. Sullivan, and possibly an alliance between Sullivan and McCarren to control the next City Convention.

Senators Fitzgerald and Riordan are both followers of Sullivan. Senator Martin is a brother of James J. Martin, who has always been a rival of Murphy in the affairs of the Democratic organization, and Senator Hawkins represents the Bronx, which is controlled by Borough President Haffen, between whom and Murphy no love is lost. The only one of the five Senators, therefore, against whom Murphy could exercise any great amount of influence is Senator Foley, who represents the district of which Commissioner Oakley is the leader.

But Tammany men do not take Leader Murphy's threats very seriously. The five Senators have denied that they had any personal instructions from Murphy as to how they should vote. Mr. Murphy says he gave the instructions to Senator Grady, but Senator Grady did not hint in the debate on the gas bills that the Tammany Senators who refused to follow his leadership were disobeying the orders of their organization.

State Chairman Odell is to return about June 1. He and Gov. Higgins, it is said, will endeavor to name a State Lighting Commission which can be relied upon to reduce the price of gas in New York City, and thus give Odell the issue on which he expects to win the municipal campaign.

AFTER DINNER INJUNCTION.

McAdoo Served with One After Traffic Squad Banquet.

Commissioners McAdoo was loud in his praises yesterday of the police parade on Saturday, and especially of the dinner of the traffic squad at the Waldorf-Astoria on that evening, at which he was the toastmaster and the guest of honor. During his speech at the dinner the Commissioner referred to being served with many injunctions, and yesterday while calling attention to that portion of his address said:

"When I went out to get my hat after the dinner I was accosted by a country constable who placed in my hand an injunction issued by a Judge Ward of Westchester.

"'Do you want to see the original?' the constable asked.

"'No,' I replied, 'I've seen enough originals.'"

Fond Adventures.

Four "Tales of the Youth of the World"—a wonderful new volume of sensuous impressions by Maurice Hewlett. Since the publication of The Forest Lovers Mr. Hewlett has written nothing so palpitating with the full and splendid life of that virile day. Each of the four stories is a masterpiece. The Love Chase, the concluding tale, is a revelation, and promises to make, if such a thing is possible, a new reputation for the author.

The Courtship of a Careful Man

"A half dozen charming, delicate little love tales are offered by Mr. E. S. Martin in this volume. The scene is New York, but the point of them all is cleverly human, and for once in New York stories we have the manners of decent society."—N. Y. Sun.

The Probationer

These stories are placed in the blizzard-swept regions of the great Canadian Northwest. The Brooklyn Eagle says: "Mr. Herman Whitaker has given us a series of very vivid pictures, has caught the striking phases of these untamed communities of ranchers, miners, prospectors, and riff-raff from the towns, with skill and appreciation. A collection of really vital tales."

FORMER GREAT TENOR DEAD.

Edoardo Rubini Was Famous as Singer and Teacher.

Edoardo Rubini Synfen Jervis, known generally as Edoardo Rubini, musician and composer, died Sunday at 115 West One Hundred and Sixth Street. He was born in Rome sixty-three years ago. He studied under Thalberg and Moscheles, and was successively first tenor at the Italian opera, St. Petersburg, first tenor at the Grand Opera, Paris; musical director of the same institution, and principal professor of singing at the London Academy. The English Royal Princesses were his pupils in singing for several years.

He sang with Patti, Nellson, and other vocal celebrities. Among singers taught by him were Volpini, Scalsi, Paulini Lucca, Marimon, Cotogni, Joseph Maas, and Campanini.

Rubini leaves a widow and daughter. The funeral will be held to-day.

DEATH LIST OF A DAY.

Washington Duke.

CHARLOTTE, N. C., May 8.—Washington Duke died this afternoon.

Mr. Duke was born on Dec. 20, 1820, in Orange County, N. C., the tobacco belt, of a family of Democrats and Methodists, one of ten children. At forty he had become the owner of three hundred acres. At the outbreak of the war Duke opposed secession, but volunteered as a Confederate, served as an infantryman at Camp Holmes, went into the navy, and was at the defense of Charleston, drifted into the artillery arm, and after Richmond surrendered was captured. He returned to his farm with less than $1. There he became an ardent Republican. He has always said that his success was due to a complete concert of interest between him and his sons and daughter. As tobacco grew they soon laid the foundation for the widespread name of the Duke brand. Their factory, at first in their house, in 1904 had expanded to cover ten acres, as the Washington Duke branch of the American Tobacco Company. Mr. Duke was always a generous friend of the negro. He gave $500,000 to Trinity College, $100,000 being on the condition that it open to women, but generously endowed the Louisberg Female College and the Durham Southern Conservatory of Music.

THE OUTSIDE SECURITIES

Northern Securities Leads Whole Market Downward.

Extreme Dullness in Investment Issues—New Low Price for Japanese Bonds—Poor Market for Pennsylvania Convertibles.

Practically every issue traded in on the curb yesterday showed some falling off from Saturday's final prices, but in most cases the transactions were not large enough to result in price changes of importance. Several of the mining stocks in which pools have been active, Northern Securities and the American Can stocks were the only ones in which brokers found more than temporary employment yesterday. The majority of the specialties, including most of the investment issues usually dealt in in the outside market were yesterday, as they had been for some days, extremely quiet. Thus far the most substantial issues have not suffered very much in price, but they have become very dull, and from the broker's point of view this is even worse than weakness.

NORTHERN SECURITIES lost about 2 points net after an extreme decline of 2¾ points. On Saturday traders had been influential in advancing the stock partly on the theory that the large deposits of the stock under the plan of distribution of assets would make it relatively easy to advance the price of the stock still outstanding. That no such effort was being made yesterday was evident from the manner in which the price declined. The supply of stock is of course growing smaller from day to day, but it is likely, even if a speculative movement in the stock at this time would not be discouraged by the insiders, that it would be an easier matter to put the stock up than it would be to turn the paper profits of the operation into cash. When but little is left outstanding it would of course take but little stock to advance the price 10 or twenty or even more points, but it might be that the stock bought at high prices would be left on the hands of the originators of such a movement. It is probably this consideration that has discouraged an attempt along these lines.

PENNSYLVANIA NEW BONDS.—The statement that only about 10 per cent. of the $100,000,000 issue of Pennsylvania Railroad 3½ per cent. convertible bonds had been taken by the stockholders to whom they were offered at par acted as a damper on the market heretofore quoted for the new issue. A market was sought for them all day by several brokers, but the best actual bid reported was 98. It has been a long time since an offering of securities by the Pennsylvania has met with such apparent indifference on the part of the stockholders

JAPANESE new 4½s reflected the uneasiness arising from the reported attitude of France toward the Russian fleet in the Far East by declining to 86, the lowest price yet recorded for the issue.

The principal transactions in 100-share lots reported in the outside market yesterday, with high, low, and last prices, were as follows:

THE FINANCIAL MARKETS

Decline Renewed; Call Money Easy, 2½@2¾ Per Cent.

Foreign Politics Prominent Among Several Causes for Apprehensive Disturbance of Prices.

There was rude awakening yesterday from the general conviction that the Oriental hostilities had been definitely limited to the two original combatants, and, as so often happens, this shock was emphasized by other factors bearing no relation to it, but having distinct market bearings of similar sort. There were those who thought that the Equitable meeting, with results uncertain in themselves and unknown during business hours, was quite as influential as the more generally discussed foreign politics. It is still possible to believe that the Franco-Japanese crisis is as yet a matter of popular and newspaper irritation, and hence has not passed beyond control by the superiors of the colonial officials charged with extending illegitimate hospitality to Russia's Baltic squadron. But the Equitable business is uncontrollable. It must go to the end, and nobody knows what the end is. Of course, the Street is not disturbed about the fortunes of either faction in the Equitable. The point of disquietude is regarding the alteration in the manner of administration of the entire mass of funds controlled by insurance companies of all names. Capital may be less easily procurable, and it may even be that readjustments of capital already ventured may be necessary.

For further influence of a depressing sort there was embarrassment of a London operator in Americans, with free sales for his account, and intimations of failures across the ocean unless a rally here helped the approaching settlement there. While it was the aggregaion of factors which produced the full result, and while the market here and abroad placed most weight upon that first mentioned, yet it must be said that solider opinion was against an alarmist view of either market or political movements. The situation is nothing like that when the Russians shed British blood on the Dogger Bank last October. The Czar has himself ordered Rojestvensky to proceed; the French Foreign Minister has ordered his subordinates to observe their duty; and even proof of the allegations does not convict France of technical violation of the rule of neutrality adopted by itself—for itself. There is no settled and single rule of neutral duty. France is its own judge of what the case requires. Better execution of orders, discipline of the Russian officer who violated his parole, and such amendments of details would regularize the situation, unless the heads of States are resolved upon war. Of that there is now no indication without suspecting the Czar and Delcassé of duplicity.

That the situation was not so bad as painted perhaps may be inferred by the reduction in the price of gold in London and the advance of sterling in Paris. There were good reports of earnings here, and good crop reports, but perhaps the best sign of all was the slowing down of business. Each hour was duller than its predecessor until at the last there was some renewal of activity, with a partial recovery of prices. The decline scarcely averaged much over a point, and was exceptionally severe in such specialties only as People's Gas and Consolidated Gas, which have not yet adjusted themselves to the legislative outlook. Such specific influences have no general application.

KNOTT REPLIES TO SIELCKEN.

Kansas City Southern for Entry at Port Arthur, He Says.

S. R. Knott, President of the Kansas City Southern Railway Company, has issued a circular in reply to that sent to stockholders of the company by the committee of which Hermann Sielcken is Chairman. Mr. Knott replies to what he declares are erroneous statements in the Sielcken circular concerning the operations of the property, policy of its management, and the result from that policy. With regard to the charge that no effort has been made by the management to make Port Arthur a port of entry, Mr. Knott points out that this action is dependent upon proper legislation by act of Congress, but that efforts to secure such legislation have invariably had the strong support of the management of the railway company and of its canal company.

There are now and have been for several years at Port Arthur, with office on the export pier furnished by the canal company, a Deputy Collector and Inspector of Customs, so that vessels enter and clear without delay. Arrangements have been perfected for the transshipment of through merchandise, appraised or unappraised, in bond, through the port of Port Arthur.

TO QUIT JERSEY FOR OHIO.

Union Traction to Reincorporate Under Favorable Law.

CINCINNATI, May 8.—A new corporation, which probably will be known as the Union Traction Company of Ohio, is to be formed to take over the Union Traction Company of New Jersey, which owns all the assets of the Cincinnati Traction Company, according to reports published to-day. The capital stock will be about $16,000,000.

Among the property holdings of the new corporation will be the Cincinnati Car Company, the Cincinnati Zoological Gardens, and the Old Mill Creek Valley Road. The abolition of the double liability law is responsible for the transfer to an Ohio charter.

TOPICS IN WALL STREET.

Market Resting—Stock Exchange Election—The Foreign Situation.

Members of the Stock Exchange yesterday voted for officers for the coming year, and the regular nominations went through without opposition. The dullness on the floor facilitated the election, which resulted as follows: President—H. K. Pomroy; Treasurer—F. W. Gilley; Members of Governing Committee, to Serve Four Years—J. T. Atterbury, E. V. D. Cox, W. W. Heaton, William H. Hollister, W. Strother Jones, Austin P. Kelley, J. B. Mabon, William Robinson, H. C. Swords, and Blair S. Williams; Trustee of Gratuity Fund, to Serve Five Years—S. H. Kissam; Members of Nominating Committee for 1906—Ira A. Kip, Jr., H. T. B. Jacquelin, R. M. Stuart-Wortley, James B. Taller, and C. W. Turner. The appointive offices of Secretary and Chairman will probably be filled at this week's meeting of the Governing Committee.

Letting Market Rest.

Only 839,572 shares were traded in yesterday. There was double that amount the same day last week. The decreased activity was taken as an indication that the liquidation was over, but the dullness which became marked on every rally was considered the best possible evidence that the largest interests were not willing to encourage a rise at this time. There are a great many people who think the market will be all the better for a rest, and they welcome the decrease in activity. Most of this is now furnished by the floor traders, otherwise the market would probably be much duller than it is. Indeed, compared with last year, the market might be called active, for then the daily transactions hardly totaled 300,000 shares.

Loan Accounts Reduced.

No better idea of the reduction in the commission house interest in the market can be given than by the statement that the loan accounts carried by these houses have been reduced anywhere from 35 to 65 per cent. Commission houses are doing practically nothing in the market, and, naturally, they have no need for funds. Many of the large speculative accounts are absolutely idle. One commission house which has a customer whose margin account totals over $800,000 has been loaning out this money every afternoon just before the close for lack of any speculative commitments in which it could be employed. The customer has sold out all his stocks and is not anxious to get in again just now.

Bad "Tip" on Copper.

A customer in a certain brokerage firm on his way downtown the other day found a copper cent. His find set his mind to work thinking about copper, and when a few hours later a friend gave him a "tip" on Amalgamated for par he remembered the penny and promptly bought 100 shares. The price as promptly declined, and he is out several points. He has not seen daylight on this transaction since he made it. The action of Copper for the last week or so has aroused some comment. Traders are wondering what it is that holds this stock at present figures without any material change either way. Occasionally large buying orders in the stock are suspected the price is at once marked up, only to be permitted to drop back as soon as the orders disappear.

Union Pacific Restricted.

Traders commented on the support which was extended to Union Pacific on a scale down. Three times the stock was offered down to 117⅛, and only on the fourth attempt did it break through that price, and then only for a few minutes. The resistance shown by this stock against the efforts of the bears to hammer it was considered as a favorable sign by those who are expecting a pronounced rally. The stock has been a market leader for so long that selling pressure in an effort to force the market down is every day concentrated upon Union Pacific, just as all attempts to bring about a rally are inaugurated by the bidding up of this stock. According to the belief of shrewd traders the same interests which support the stock around 117 are at work against any advance much beyond 120. There seems to be a peg in at both ends.

The War's Influence.

The weakness yesterday was due mainly to the foreign situation, and the talk on the floor centred principally upon the question as to what would happen to the stock market if developments should take a serious turn. It was generally conceded that a victory of the Russian fleet would cause a severe break in the market, and for this reason brokers expect that the feverish feeling which now prevails in the market will continue until after the two fleets shall have measured their strength. London yesterday showed by its heavy selling in this market that it held similar ideas. The sales by London aggregated nearly 100,000 shares. Of this amount 40,000 shares were, it is said, sold for account of a prominent London operator who found it advisable to close out his lines before the next fortnightly settlement, which begins to-morrow.

THE LONDON MARKET.

LONDON, May 8.—Money was not plentiful in the market to-day and rates were firm, with the promise of tightening owing to repayments to the Bank of England and the call for an installment of the Japanese loan. Discounts were firm in sympathy with money.

Prices on the Stock Exchange were weak and trading was inactive, the bulls closing accounts prior to the settlement owing to the political uneasiness and dealers making lower quotations in the absence of buyers. Consols were heavy, but recovered a fraction in the afternoon. Americans opened weak at below parity on selling for New York account. Operators were more nervous regarding the approaching settlement and the prospective differences to be met. The Continent sold, the decline was continued during the afternoon, and the market closed weak.

Foreigners were flat. Japanese declined. The new loan was quoted at one-eighth discount. Imperial Japanese Government 6s of 1904 were quoted at 100⅝.

Kafirs were depressed.

A very quiet market prevailed in Boston, with prices inclined to sag. Commission houses were inclined to sell stocks where a market could be found, but the trading was very light. Traders were not inclined to operate, and the market left to itself became "groggy." Price changes among the copper shares were fractional, but at the expense of values. The closing was quiet. PHILADELPHIA PRICES.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, May 8.—United Gas Improvement stock again moved independently of the general list to-day, advancing from 114 to 116⅝. The Street is coming to the opinion that nobody else can get the gas lease and that whether the present proposition falls or goes through, the city is unable, legally, to do anything for another bidder, and the United Gas Improvement's position is safe at least until 1927. Philadelphia Electric was also firm, in sympathy, though it did not advance much. In other parts of the list weakness was apparent. Bell Telephone was off 1¾, Lehigh Valley ½, Pennsylvania, ⅝, Philadelphia Rapid Transit ⅜, and other issues smaller fractions. The total sales were 48,136 shares; bonds, $68,400. The list follows:

TRADING IN BALTIMORE.

Special to The New York Times.

Married Men

must provide for their families. In what way can you do this best is the question which stares you in the face. The best provision possible is to leave your family, in case of your death, something tangible, something which is not only worth money and can be turned into money, but something which will bring in an income if necessary. In what way can all this be accomplished so easily as by buying, when you have the opportunity, a home, particularly when you can buy this home in such a way that after a small cash payment the balance can be paid monthly in such amounts as only to equal rent which you are now paying. Write me for full information.

PALISADE

¶ Winding along the edge of the cliff 250 feet above the Hudson we are constructing a beautiful driveway, which will in time become famous. It is to extend from our southerly line (opposite 130th St. ferry) to a point more than a mile north, the ends being marked by low, rambling pergolas. All streets throughout the 1,000 acres which constitute this model suburb will thread their way under stately oaks and chestnuts toward this River Drive.

¶ Another exclusive feature of Palisade is that no unsightly houses will be permitted. The architectural beauties of the place must be preserved. Thus Palisade will be indeed the Model Suburb.

¶ If you are interested in finding an accessible country home—one within 40 minutes of your downtown office and within one mile of central New York—we cordially invite you to visit Palisade.

¶ Houses range in price from $10,000 to $30,000—some a trifle less.

A beautiful descriptive book is yours for the asking.

WITNESS IN CONTEMPT IN TOBACCO INQUIRY

Hale's Refusal to Answer Temporarily Halts Investigation.

ARREST AND FINE ORDERED

Habeas Corpus Writ Will Be Argued This Week and Power of Inquisitors Decided.

Upon his persistent refusal to answer questions asked him by the Federal Grand Jury in the investigation of the Tobacco Trust, Edwin F. Hale, Secretary and Treasurer of the McAndrews & Forbes Company, was yesterday morning adjudged guilty of contempt by Judge Lacombe, sitting in the United States Circuit Court. He was fined and the Marshal was ordered to take him into custody.

While the order was signed and entered it was, by agreement of counsel, held in abeyance pending the taking out of a writ of habeas corpus by Mr. Hale's attorneys returnable before the United States Circuit Court of Appeals. The writ will be argued this week.

If the writ is upheld Mr. Hale need answer no questions about the company which employs him or about its relations to the trust. If the writ is dismissed he must produce the books of his company, show its contracts, and all correspondence and memoranda relating to its operation or go to jail. If Mr. Hale cannot be forced to answer questions or produce documentary evidence neither can other officials and employes of the trust now under investigation by the Department of Justice.

The Federal Grand Jury reported its presentment charging Mr. Hale with contempt of court shortly after Judge Lacombe ascended the bench yesterday morning. The presentment, which was handed in by Foreman Thomas M. Folsom, gave the history of the jury's dealings with Mr. Hale, reciting that he was served with a subpoena duces tecum on April 28, which required him to appear on May 2 "to testify and give evidence in a certain action now pending and undetermined in the Circuit Court of the United States for the Southern District of New York between the United States of America and the McAndrews & Forbes Company on the part of the United States," and to bring with him "all understandings, agreements, arrangements, or contracts, whether evidenced by correspondence, memoranda, formal agreements, or other writings between the McAndrews & Forbes Company from the date of its organization and the J. D. Young Company, J. D. Lewis, the American Licorice Company, the National Licorice Company, Meiser & Ritterhouse, and the Stamford Manufacturing Company."

These concerns are all engaged in the manufacture of licorice used by the plants of the Tobacco Trust engaged in the manufacture of chewing tobacco. The subpoena also called for the statement of accounts between these firms, the McAndrews & Forbes Company supposedly being the head of the trust's licorice department. Also the subpoena demanded all letters received by Mr. Hale's company from the following manufacturers of chewing tobacco:

Strater Brothers, Monarch Tobacco Company, and H. S. Martin Tobacco Company, Louisville, Ky.; Day and Night Tobacco Company and E. C. Eshleby & Co., Cincinnati, Ohio; Frischmuth Brothers & Co., Philadelphia; R. A. Patterson & Co., Larus & Brother Company, and United States Tobacco Company, Richmond, Va.; P. Lorillard Company, Jersey City; R. J. Reynolds & Co., Winston, N. C., and the P. H. Mayo Company, Richmond, Va.

When Mr. Hale appeared he did not produce the books. He also declined to answer certain questions on two grounds—first, that there was no legal warrant for his examination, and, second, that any answers he might make would tend to incriminate him. One question which he refused to answer was:

"Is there any agreement or arrangement between the American Tobacco Company and the McAndrews & Forbes Company in relation to the trade or business in licorice, licorice paste, or licorice mass, affecting the business between the several States of the United States?"

Until the writ of habeas corpus is returned the investigation will necessarily come to a halt. Much information gathered from independent sources is already in the hands of Henry W. Taft, who is in charge of the investigation. His associate, Felix H. Levy, has visited all the larger cities in the North and Middle West and has learned about all there is to learn from this source.

WON'T LET THEATRE OPEN.

McAdoo Refuses Permit to Nassau—Hammerstein Wins.

Police Commissioner McAdoo announced yesterday that he had issued orders forbidding the opening of the Nassau Theatre at Pearl and Willoughby Streets, Brooklyn, last night. The Commissioner refused a license to this place, which formerly was known as Watson's "Cosy Corner," on May 1, until after he had completed his investigation, but permitted the house to keep open.

The Commissioner said that he had found that disorderly persons congregated in the rathskeller connected with the playhouse. He said that both Mr. Watson and Mr. Hammerstein, the present proprietor of the place, were in the room, but that he did not know whether or not they knew about conditions there. The present proprietor of the playhouse is a son of Oscar Hammerstein.

At the same time the Commissioner said that he had received word from Building Superintendent Hopper that Oscar Hammerstein had conformed with all the requirements of the Building Department in his theatre in Manhattan, and that he would grant him a license.

Before this, however, Justice Bischoff had ruled that Mr. Hammerstein was entitled to his license, and the Corporation Counsel's representative sent word that he had withdrawn from the case, leaving Mr. Hammerstein victorious.

MAYOR FOR PENSIONING BLIND CITY EMPLOYE

Some Rules Higher Than Those of Civil Service, He Says.

LAWYERS SUPPORT THE BILL

Civil Service Reform Association Opposes It—Arguments Heard by McClellan on Yale Pension Bill.

Civil service legislation occupied most of the time which Mayor McClellan yesterday devoted to hearings on bills which have come before him from Albany. The first bill was one permitting the Board of Estimate and Apportionment, with the recommendation of the Finance Department, to pension James Brice, who, on Saturday last, completed his thirty-eighth year in the office of the City Chamberlain. He is sixty-four years old, has become totally blind in the service, and is otherwise incapacitated.

Half a dozen lawyers backed up the plea of Deputy Chamberlain John Campbell, who appeared in favor of the measure. All of them told of Brice's worth and of his record. Mr. Campbell said that for many years, under the fee system, Mr. Brice handled from $3,000,000 to $8,000,000 a year, and that his accounts had invariably been correct, also that a system of bookkeeping devised by him had been adopted by every financial department in the State. Secretary Elliot H. Goodwin of the Civil Service Reform Association alone opposed the measure, declaring that it violated the principles of civil service.

"Well, putting aside your stern sense of duty for the moment," broke in Mayor McClellan, "don't you think the city should do something for this faithful servant, or do you hold that he should be turned out to starve now that he is incapacitated and blind?"

Mr. Goodwin said he could not answer the question, but that if the Mayor should approve the measure he would have to refer the whole matter to the Law Committee of his organization, which in turn would communicate with the Governor.

The Mayor indicated his intention of signing the bill.

"We civil service reformers," he said, smiling, "sometimes must forget duty and remember that we have red blood in our veins, else we might violate rules even higher than those of the civil service."

Later in the day the Mayor heard the arguments for and against the Yale bill to provide a city retirement fund for the benefit of civil employes specified as entitled to pensions. Resolutions in opposition were presented by the Civil Service Reform Association and by the Board of Trade and Transportation. Secretary Goodwin of the Reform Association and George McAnany both made arguments against the bill. Henry W. Hardon appeared for the Citizens' Union, and filed a lengthy brief against the measure.

Both W. H. Jaspe and Joseph J. Haag of the Controller's office took the other side of the question.

The Mayor stated that Controller Metz, the intended to sign the bill.

LOAN SWINDLE COST THE EQUITABLE $27,000

Arrest of ex-Convict Follows Second Attempt of Same Sort.

WATCH KEPT ON EMPLOYE

Policy Stolen from Company's Vaults and Then Sent Back as Security for the Loan.

Through the arrest in Sprague ville, Penn., late on Monday night, of Samuel Lobley, alias William Dailey, forty-five years old, and a swindler from his boyhood, the officials of the Equitable Life Assurance Society believe that they have the prime mover in a forgery scheme that has cost the society $27,000 and might have meant a far greater loss had it not been for the watchfulness of a clerk in the Fulton Street branch of the Brooklyn Bank last January. A trusted employe of the society directly implicated in the robbery by Lobley is under surveillance and will be taken into custody as soon as certain information has been obtained which the officials of the Equitable and of the Pinkerton agency are looking for.

Lobley gave the name of William Dailey when arrested, and it was under that name that he lived at 495 Grand Street, Brooklyn, in the Park section, for several years after his discharge from Sing Sing in 1899. He had with him in the Pennsylvania town his wife, who has figured in his Brooklyn experience, and he had been living there, as he did in Brooklyn, in good style, posing as a retired business man, running a couple of automobiles and a string of good horses. He had bank accounts under various names in the Mechanics' Bank of Brooklyn, the Nassau Trust Company, and the Brooklyn Bank.

The newspapers of the first of last February contained passing reference to the detection of a bad check drawn against the Equitable Life Assurance Society, but little further was said of the matter. That was the occasion that started the investigation into the Dailey case. Assistant Superintendent Bailey of the Pinkerton agency took personal charge of it from that time. The check was one drawn to the order of R. C. Henderson, who for some time before had maintained a satisfactory account at the Fulton Street branch of the bank. Its amount was $27,000, and before payment the bank telephoned to the Equitable Society, where payment was promptly stopped. "Henderson" did not go back to the bank to inquire about the check, and about the same time "Dailey" disappeared from the Park Slope.

The examination of the books of the Equitable's loan department that—was put on foot took the investigators back to March of 1904, when William C. Cotton of Brookline, Mass., the holder of a policy for $50,000, applied for a loan of $27,000, this being less than the policy's cash value, and got it through the usual form. The policy, according to custom, was locked up in the vaults of the society as security. Some time between March and Aug. 19, it appeared, the policy was stolen from the vaults, and the books at the same time so changed as to make it appear that no loan had been made against it. It was not long thereafter before a letter was received, signed "W. C. Cotton" by a forgery so skillful that comparison with Mr. Cotton's known signature did not lead any one to suspect it, requesting a loan of $27,000 on the policy, the check to be made payable to the order of "Samuel Edwards." The usual reference was made, with the result that no loan was found to lie against the policy, and the request of "W. C. Cotton" was honored.

A letter containing the "Edwards" check was prepared and placed in the mail basket, addressed to the Boston agency, in the care of which the "Cotton" letter had requested it should be sent. But the Boston agency never got it, for, it appeared from the examination, the letter was taken from the basket before the collections were made, turned over to an outside confederate, presumably Lobley, and the check finally cashed through the Merchants' Bank of Brooklyn. The Cotton policy was then placed back in the vaults, as it had been after the bona-fide loan to its owner was made.

Some time between August and the end of 1904 the policy was again taken from the vaults, and, according to the officials of the society, exactly the same process was gone through again, save for the slip at the Fulton Street Branch of the Brooklyn Bank, which led to the detection of the entire scheme.

The identity of the employe implicated in the swindle the Equitable officials keep a secret, saying only that he has been in the employ of the society for several years and had enjoyed a high degree of trust.

HENDRICKS COMES HERE.

To Begin Examination of Equitable Officers To-day.

Superintendent Francis C. Hendricks of the State Department of Insurance got into the city last night with his personal counsel, Congressman Michael E. Driscoll of Syracuse, to begin to-day the personal examination of officials and Directors of the Equitable Life Assurance Society, which will form a part of the general investigation of Equitable affairs by the State department. The examination will be held at the offices of the department, 11 Broadway, and is expected to continue for several days.

Neither Mr. Hendricks nor Congressman Driscoll would discuss their work here last night. It was learned, however, that Superintendent Hendricks has already made inquiry of the officers of the Equitable Trust Company as to what duties James H. Hyde performs in that institution in consideration of the ten-thousand-dollar salary that he receives as its Vice President.

The summons served on Directors of the Equitable at the meeting of the board on Monday, to appear in Saratoga County to answer to the charges made by Mrs. Mary S. Young of individual responsibility for any existing irregularities in the society, continued to be a topic of Equitable discussion yesterday. More of the Directors were served yesterday, and by the nature of the action, which is begun as a case in equity, it will be necessary for the defendants to appear personally in Saratoga County when the trial comes on.

It was learned yesterday that one of the propositions that has been made to the Frick investigating committee of Equitable Directors by the Alexander adherents is to obtain from the firm of Kuhn, Loeb & Co. a detailed statement of all the transactions that have passed between the firm and the society. Jacob H. Schiff, the senior member of the firm, has been advised by counsel that there is nothing in any of the transactions that is laid open to question by reason of his being a Director of the Equitable.

In a brief which was filed in the Supreme Court in Brooklyn yesterday in the Lord suit seeking an injunction restraining the officers of the Equitable from carrying out the mutualization plan, an answer was made to the charge made in another brief submitted in that case that President Alexander had been unfaithful to the trust that he exercised toward the estate of the late Henry B. Hyde. The brief declares:

"There is nothing in the trust deed requiring Mr. Alexander to protect the interests of the stockholders as such, the duties of the Trustees, as already stated, being confined to voting for Directors and collecting dividends by proxy and attorney. Any charge that Mr. Alexander has in any way wronged Mr. Hyde is without foundation."

Another suggestion of a new name for the Presidency of the society was made yesterday. The new name is that of J. Edward Simmons, President of the Fourth National Bank. Mr. Simmons said that he would have to be excused from discussing the story.

SAFETY VALVE'S SCREECH.

Scares Woman Senseless—Keeps Up Racket Two Hours.

A woman was frightened into insensibility by the sudden screech of a safety valve in the basement of a new building at the corner of Thirty-second Street and Fifth Avenue last night. She was carried into the Aberdeen Hotel and brought to her senses with difficulty. She refused her name, and was sent away in a cab.

The safety valve is attached to a boiler below the building, which is nearly completed. Under the sidewalk, covered with iron gratings, are four boilers for heating purposes. The watchman and the engineer were both absent, when the steam, reaching a high pressure, opened the safety valve.

The valve let off a screech just as the woman was passing over the grating above. She staggered away with a scream of terror and fell to the sidewalk unconscious. As she was carried into the Aberdeen the safety valve was screaming like a siren. The Aberdeen patrons, who soon became nervous, stood it for two hours. Then the night clerk called up Police Headquarters. The Tenderloin was thus communicated with. Capt. Cottrell sent Policeman Flaherty to investigate. He found the steam at a pressure of over 120 pounds, with the furnace roaring and no one in sight. Flaherty, fearing that the boilers would blow up and wreck the building and the Aberdeen, which is practically next door, whipped off his coat and turned fireman. He opened the furnaces and raked out the fires, and had the relief presently of seeing the pressure diminish and hearing the siren voice of the valve dwindle down to a faint wail.

Boiler Inspector Reid was sent from Police Headquarters to look into the affair.

FIGHT OVER REVOLVER.

Man and Woman Struggle at Hospital Door—Depart Together.

A woman who told the Bellevue Hospital authorities that she was Catherine McNamee, of 231 West Twenty-third Street, and a man who said he was W. L. Markell of 165 West Twenty-first Street, alighted from a cab at the main gate of the hospital shortly after 10 o'clock last night. Before the keeper could stop them they had entered the court and were nearing the main office.

Several surgeons and helpers, who were standing about, saw the man and woman struggling, and ran to the scene. They separated them. In the man's hand was a revolver, which he said the woman had tried to use. When they were taken to the office, he said: "This woman is following me around continually. I cannot have peace when she is about. I want to get ride of her, and she refuses to go to her home."

Dr. Thorton took the woman and man to the psychopathic ward, where he examined Miss McNamee. Afterward the physician said that he would not admit her to the institution, as he could find no trace of insanity, and there had been no complaint against her, and she was not under arrest. Markell and Miss McNamee then left the building. A policeman met them, and asked the man whether he wished to make a complaint. He said he did not. The revolver was kept by Night Superintendent McHale. The pair boarded a south-bound Second Avenue car.

SAN FRANCISCO, May 9.—The trading schooner Triton, just arrived here from the Marshall Islands, reports sighting a floating mine adrift on April 21 in latitude 37 degrees 21 minutes north and longitude 180 degrees west.

The point named in the foregoing is in the middle of the Pacific Ocean, and in about the same latitude as San Francisco and Tokio.

It is directly in the line of steamships traveling between Japan and the Pacific Coast.

Latest Shipping News.

The steamer Caronia, from Liverpool and Queenstown, was in communication by wireless telegraph with Siasconsett, Mass., at 10 o'clock last night, the vessel then being forty miles east of the Nantucket Lightship. She will probably dock at about 1:30 o'clock this afternoon.

OPEN BETTING RING WILL BEGIN TO-MORROW

Track Managers Refuse to Recognize Turf Association.

MEANS END OF SYNDICATE

Withdrawal of Restrictions Is Expected, However, to Increase Revenue of the Racing Associations.

The open ring will go into effect to-morrow at Belmont Park, and the control by the Metropolitan Turf Association of betting at the race tracks will be ended.

Just before the last race of the card yesterday the track managers broke the line of the "big ring," occupied exclusively in the past by the members of the Metropolitan Association, and put in five "back line" bookmakers to fill out the eighty places that the track managers insist shall be the minimum number for the "big ring."

The members of the Metropolitan Association began the day under the impression that they had won a partial victory, because Monday they resumed control of the first row or, "big ring," with fewer than eighty layers in line, but with an offer to pay for privileges for eighty.

With this view of the situation the organized bookmakers expected the same arrangement to be in force when they got to the race track yesterday, but there were fewer of the Metropolitan Association's members ready to lay odds than on the day before. Three men who were in line Monday had dropped out, and there were no recruits. The Metropolitan Association took possession of the ring in spite of the fact that they had only seventy-four men in line, and there was no invitation for the back line men to fill up the vacant places when the betting began.

John Cavanagh, the manager of the betting ring, permitted the arrangement to go into effect temporarily, but notified the track managers, and when half the races had been run there was a conference between representatives of the track and of the bookmakers.

The track managers flatly refused to accept the offer of the Metropolitan Association to pay for eighty places and gave orders that resulted in a quick selection of back-line bookmakers to fill vacancies in the big ring. R. Tebo, C. Litt, J. Cahill, C. Morrison, and M. Gargan, all non-members of the bookmakers' organization, were brought from the rear and put in places in the front line.

There was no protest from the Metropolitan Association, as the action taken by the track managers made it pain that their idea of retaining exclusive control of the betting in return for the guarantee they made, was mistaken, and they were prepared for the announcement that was made a little later, that for the future the betting ring will be open, with equal privileges to all applicants for places in the line of layers.

Another step toward the open ring was made after the races, when officers of the Westchester Racing Association acted on the claims made by the Metropolitan Association, by deciding that they would not recognise any organization representing the betting interests.

It was said by the managers of the track after the conference that the decision of the officers meant that for the future there would be no transaction with the Metropolitan Turf Association as an organization, and that the open-ring plan will be put in force at once.

According to custom, when the Belmont Park meeting began, the layers who went on for business drew for places for the first six days, and those who took places on the first day have the privilege of occupying them to-day, the last day of the six. To-morrow another drawing will be held and the members of the Metropolitan Turf Association then will draw for places on equality with the men formerly known as "back liners," the exclusive control of the choicest places by the bookmakers' organization ending after to-day. Vacancies in the first line of eighty places to-day also will be filled from the back line.

The agreement reached by the Belmont Park track officials will be followed by similar action by the managers of the other New York race tracks, and the exclusive privileges that the Metropolitan Turf Association has controlled for ten years will be at an end.

The open-ring plan, by taking away the privileges of the association, practically will destroy the organization, membership in which has recently sold at between $4,000 and $5,000. The open ring, however is expected to increase greatly the revenue of the race tracks.

ROCKEFELLER RETURNS.

Not Necessary to Defend My Father, He Says—Class Meets Him.

Mr. and Mrs. John D. Rockefeller, Jr., and their daughter arrived last evening on the Red Star Line steamship Finland. Mr. Rockefeller was met by his secretary and several black-coated young men, presumably members of the Bible class.

The most exciting feature of the young man's homecoming was an attempt by a persistent photovrapher to take his picture. He circled about the Rockefellers in an attempt to set off a flashlight. Between him and his subject the members of the class dodged and jumped. This excited so much attention on the dock that Edward Wright, the Superintendent, had to order the man away.

Mr. Rockefeller said he was not desirous of having the picture taken. Hearing this, the members of the class redoubled their efforts. "I will call the police," shouted one of them, as he danced about before the camera and kept between it and Mr. Rockefeller.

Mr. Rockefeller and his family have been abroad three months. He had been very ill, he said, and admitted that he had not entirely recovered. He added that he would continue to rest at his country home until he had regained his health. Mr. Rockefeller took part in the Sabbath services on shipboard. He led in a long prayer, in which he invoked the Divine blessing.

When questioned regarding the controversy in the American Board of Foreign Missions over the acceptance of money from John D. Rockefeller, Sr., he said that the subject was delicate, and added: "I don't think it is necessary to defend my father."

On the general subject as to wheeling "tainted" money, would help or retard the Gospel of Christ [illegible]

YALE SENIOR DEAD IN ROOM.

Bullet in Haserot's Head—Coroner Says Suicide.

NEW HAVEN, May 9.—Arthur Haserot, a Yale senior, of Cleveland, was found shot to death in his room in Welch Hall, a dormitory on the campus, to-day. The body was found by his roommate on the floor by a window seat. There was a revolver near by. The bullet wound was in the right temple.

Roy W. Hemmingway of Syracuse, N. Y., Haserot's roommate, said that Haserot attended his first recitation to-day as usual, and seemed to be in good spirits. Not once during the time he had roomed with Haserot had there been a time when he suspected that his roommate contemplated taking his life.

There was but one empty shell in the revolver. No one of the students in the dormitory heard the shot.

Medical Examiner Bartlett said to-night that there would be no further investigation, as he was convinced that the case was suicide.

Haserot was a man of good habits, it is said. It is supposed that he was temporarily deranged on account of overstudy.

The parents of Haserot were notified soon after the body was found, and are on their way to New Haven. Haserot was twenty-two years old.

Special to The New York Times.

CLEVELAND, May 9.—Arthur Haserot was the son of Samuel F. Haserot, head of the wholesale grocery concern called the Haserot Company. His parents live at 1,630 Euclid Avenue. His father said to-night that he was informed of the young man's death over the telephone from New Haven. He declared it an accident, as he said there was absolutely no reason for suicide.

DOG CAUSED COLLISION.

Yellow One Sent Fire Engine Against Trolley Car.

A yellow pup caused a collision between a fire engine and a trolley car in Washington Avenue, Brooklyn, last night. The car and the engine were both badly injured. The pup was the only one in the accident that came out without a scratch.

Ernest Scott, motorman, was bringing the car downtown. He was at St. Mark's Avenue when he saw the engine, driven by John Duvall, swing into Washington Avenue from Dean Street. Duval was urging his three horses forward to get to a fire at 566 Sterling Place, and when he approached the car he was going at a furious rate. He kept to the uptown track, and it looked as if he would clear the car easily. But—

This is where the pup comes in. The middle one of Duvall's three horses was a new one, and it didn't take much to scare him. So when he saw a scooting yellow object close in front of him he swerved sharply to the left and pushed the off horse toward the car.

The tongue of the engine went all the way through the dashboard of the car and through the front door. The motorman saw it in time and jumped.

The four passengers, when they saw what was coming, made a dash for the back door. All four dived over the rear dashboard instead of using the step. They were not hurt badly. The person who suffered most was a woman on the sidewalk, well out of reach of the engine. She was Mrs. Minnie Hendricks of 6 St. Francis Place, who fainted and had to be carried to Seney Hospital.

PRINCESS SAVED PONY.

From Furnishing Food for Wild Animals Aboard Ship.

One of the passengers aboard the Atlantic Transport Line steamship Minneapolis, which arrived here yesterday, was a young woman who was on the list as the Princess de Montalyou. Other passengers aboard were thirty lions, three tigers, ten brown bears, six elephants, ten polar bears, and fifteen leopards, in charge of Capt. Benavita of the Bostock animal show.

When the animals were put aboard at London they were followed by six horses—one of them a shaggy but affectionate little pony. They were to be killed to feed the wild beasts.

The pony's five companions were killed, one by one, to feed the animals. Then it came the pony's turn. According to those aboard, the Princess had petted the pony until she had grown very fond of him. When she learned of his impending fate she offered to buy three times his weight in fresh meat if he were spared. The offer was accepted, it is said. The Princess named the pony Minneapolis, and will take him back to her home, in the South of France.

KILLED WOMAN AND HIMSELF.

Japanese and Companion Supposed to Have Lost at Races.

A Japanese man and woman, as yet unidentified, were found dead from bullet wounds in a room of the Dry Dock Hotel, at the Bowery and First Street, at midnight last night. They had registered yesterday morning at 10:30 o'clock under the names of "Myron Lewis and wife, city."

Paul Kelly, leader of an association with headquarters in Great Jones Street, told the police of the Fifth Street Station that he had seen the man and woman go into the hotel yesterday morning and that he had had a drink with the man, who told him that he had lost $1,700 on the races.

In the room was found a programme of the events at Belmont Park on Monday. Horses that lost were marked in four races.

The man evidently had shot the woman and then himself.

Two cards were found in the man's possession. One was of the Metropolitan Hotel, San Francisco, and the other of the Standard Rooming House, 680 Jackson Street, which is supposed to be in San Francisco.

RATE LEGISLATION MUST [illegible]E, DECLARES MR. TAFT

Secretary Warns Railway Men to Aid, Not Hinder, It.

TO FIX MAXIMUM CHARGES

Stuyvesant Fish Replies to Taft, Who Reaffirms His Position—Against Government Ownership.

WASHINGTON, May 9.—Secretary Taft surprised the 800 members of the International Railway Congress, dining to-night as the guests of the American Railway Association at the New Willard Hotel, when, after being introduced as "the apostle from the Philippines," he emphatically declared that railway rate legislation must come, so that if the railway men of the country were wise they would aid not hinder it; that the sentiment of the country is such that failure of proper regulation meant a campaign on the subject that would do no good to the railroads.

Absolute silence reigned as Secretary Taft spoke his mind on the subject of rates. He was positively against Government ownership, he said, believing that nothing so deleterious could come to the country as this solution of the question. "But," he continued, "you cannot run railroads as you would run a private business. You must respond to the public demand. If there is danger of discrimination, then you must allow the establishment of some tribunal that will remedy that discrimination." The Secretary saw no reason why a tribunal properly constituted should not be competent in every sense of the word to fix the maximum rate.

President Stuyvesant Fish of the American Railway Association had introduced Secretary Taft in his capacity as toastmaster. Mr. Fish answered the Secretary at length, taking the view that the law to prevent discrimination, double-dealing, and secret rebates was ample, and he vigorously called for the enforcement of that law. Mr. Fish talked of the vested rights of the money tied up in railways. He apologised for allowing himself to be diverted, and as he sat down Secretary Taft, who sat next to him, queried in a low tone, "May I have fifteen minutes to reply?" This time was given and the Secretary utilized it in making even more positive his position in favor of legislation which would create a tribunal with authority to name a maximum rate.

"The law now is," continued the Secretary, "as decided by the Supreme Court of the United States, that first a commission and then the courts may decide whether a maximum rate established by a commission is unreasonable. Now in fixing rates, in the initial process of determining whether a rate is reasonable or unreasonable, one has got to fix what is a maximum rate. As I understand it, what is proposed is only that in litigated cases a commission shall be constituted that shall fix a minimum rate; in other words, to go through the same process it now goes through to determine what is a reasonable rate.

"What I am strongly in favor of, though, is that we shall have a body that shall decide things and that shall fix things, and that those things shall a be decided withi na reasonable time finally by the courts."

ARMOURS OFFER LOW RATES.

Attempt May Be Made to Have Fruit Growers' Charges Dropped.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, May 9.—There is a possibility that when the charges of the Michigan fruit growers against the Armours come up before the Inter-State Commerce Commission to-morrow morning an attempt will be made to have all proceedings stopped, on the ground that there is no further grievance.

At a secret meeting between the representatives of the Armour Refrigerator Lines and the railroads, held Monday night and continued to-night, the Armour people offered to reduce their carrying and icing charges from 15 to 30 per cent.

As the Michigan Central, the Lake Shore, and other Vanderbilt lines have decided to use their own refrigerator cars as soon as they can get them built, they were perfectly willing to cancel their contracts for the exclusive use of the Armour cars, but the Père Marquette, not being in any condition to handle the fruit business with its own cars, manifested a desire on Monday night to hold the Armours to their contracts, which still have three years to run.

Last night pressure was brought to bear upon the Père Marquette. Ogden Armour, it is said, was in telephonic communication for nearly an hour with Eugene Zimmerman, the new owner of the railroad. The result of this conference will not be known until the hearing is resumed to-morrow morning.

MURPHY'S GIFT TO MAYOR.

To Name Candidate for President of Board of Aldermen.

To appease Mayor McClellan's anger over the action of five of the Tammany Senators who voted against the eighty-cent gas bill in defiance of his appeal to them to support it, it is understood that Charles F. Murphy has promised the Mayor that he will be allowed to name the Democratic candidate for President of the Board of Aldermen. Mayor McClellan, it is said, has two weighty reasons for desiring the choice of a Democratic nominee to succeed Mr. Fornes. He wishes to make certain that the man selected will be of such character and standing as to add to the strength of the Democratic ticket and also to open up the way for his surrender of the Mayoralty at the end of two years should Tammany win and should he be honored with the Democratic nomination for Governor.

It is said that Mayor McClellan was not altogether pleased with the passage of the Ellsberg bill to increase the Mayor's term from two to four years, because he does not wish to tie himself to the Mayor's office for four years more. If he can secure the man who will succeed him he will be said to be willing to resign at the end of two years, his opposition to the measure, it is said, will vanish.

PRESIDENT BALKS SHERIFF.

His Train Passes 25 Miles From Instead of Through Omaha.

Special to The New York Times.

OMAHA, Neb., May 9.—Because the Sheriff with a summons was waiting for his private secretary at the Union Station in this city, President Roosevelt did not pass through Omaha to-night, but diverted his special train, trying another route, passing twenty-five miles to the north of Omaha.

The summons was in the Mae Wood suit against Loeb, Wynne, and Miller, and this Miss Wood's only chance to secure service against Loeb until he shall come this way en route to the Portland Exposition.

The Sheriff and newspapers were made to believe until the last moment that the special would pass through Omaha, and several thousand people were gathered to see the summons served. However at Ames, a small station west of Fremont, the train was switched on to the Northwestern tracks from the Union Pacific, and the run made eastward, crossing the Missouri River at Blair.

TWO KILLED ON ELEVATED.

Clerk, Apparently Ill, Falls Before Train—Motorman Crushed.

Two men were instantly killed yesterday in separate accidents on the elevated railroads. Elijah Jones, Jr., of 927 East One Hundred and Fifty-sixth Street, a clerk in the Cotton Exchange, fell before a north-bound train from the station platform at Eighth Avenue and One Hundred and Fortieth Street directly before a train at 8:30 o'clock last night. The two persons who saw him fall say that he appeared to have been stricken with a sudden illness.

John Walsh, thirty-five years old, of 214 West One Hundred and Fifth Street, a motorman, was crushed between a shuttle train and the platform at Third Avenue and One Hundred and Twenty-ninth Street in the afternoon.

FERRYBOAT JAMS THE ANGLER

Fishing Craft Has Wheelhouse Smashed Off the Battery.

The fishing steamer Angler was rammed off the Battery at 5:30 o'clock last night by the Easton, a ferryboat of the Central Railroad of New Jersey. The Easton crashed into the starboard side of the Angler, ripping up the side and staving in the covering of the paddle wheel. The Angler floated helpless until tugs came to her assistance.

She had landed her passengers at the Battery. On the Easton there were few passengers and no teams. The Angler had backed off to head for the East River when the Pierrepont, another ferryboat, forced the Easton out of her course and against the Angler.

OCTOGENARIAN HIT BY AUTO.

Dies Six Hours After Accident—Driver Is Captain Sanderson's Motor.

Special to The New York Times.

POUGHKEEPSIE, May 9.—It is feared that John Cooper, eighty-two years old, of Wappinger's Falls, will die as a result of injuries received in collision with an automobile yesterday. He was thrown out of a wagon and hurt internally.

Mr. Cooper, with W. W. Vanosdal, was riding on the State Road near Hughsonville, when an automobile in which were Capt. A. E. Anderson of the steamboat Mary Powell, two women, and a chauffeur, tried to pass their vehicle. The chauffeur apparently lost control of the machine, which darted diagonally across the road and upset the wagon.

GIRLS IN A FIRE PANIC.

Blaze in Business College Causes Scare—Teacher Kept Cool Head.

Fire in the dumb waiter shaft of the Tuxedo Building, Madison Avenue and Fifty-ninth Street, drove twenty girls in the rooms of a business college on the third floor to the fire escapes yesterday afternoon at 4 o'clock.

Their screams aroused the neighborhood, and crowds in the street shouted to them not to jump. Some of those first to get out on the escapes tried to climb down, but were stopped by G. W. Jennings, an instructor in charge of the school. At his coaxing the girls climbed back through the windows and were led down the stairs to the Fifty-ninth Street entrance. The smoke was very dense, and Jennings had the girls join hands and march down the stairs Indian file.

The damage caused by the fire was slight, but Lieut. O'Keefe of the Fire Department was shocked by electric wires and Fireman John Beck was bruised by elevator wheels.

MME. PADEREWSKI'S APPEAL.

Trying to Get Release of Murderer from Sing Sing.

Special to The New York Times.

POUGHKEEPSIE, May 9.—Mme. Ignace Paderewski, wife of the pianist, appealed recently to County Treasurer William Haubennestel to aid her efforts to obtain pardon for Antone Werner, serving a life sentence in Sing Sing for the murder of Adolph Fischer in this city on Oct. 20, 1887. She telegraphed and sent her agent, Dr. Froncsak, to invite Major Haubennestel to be her guest at luncheon. The invitations were declined and the Major regards the incident closed. Mme. Paderewski has appealed in vain to the Governor.

Her interest in Werner is due to his pathetic appeals as a fellow countryman. Major Haubennestel will do all in his power to keep Werner in prison. The man he shot worked for his father. Werner after conviction threatened revenge on the Major if he ever got a chance.

YOUNG INVENTOR MISSING.

His Plans Stolen—Fears That He Met with Foul Play.

Special to The New York Times.

PITTSBURG, May 9.—The Pittsburg Police Department is endeavoring to locate Edward Orbin, a young inventor employed at the Duquesne plant of the Carnegie Steel Company, who has been missing from his home since last Thursday. His friends fear that the young man has met with foul play.

Some time ago Orbin completed an invention for converting steel, for which $80,000 was offered him. He refused the offer and a short time afterward the drawings for the invention were stolen. Discouraged, Orbin went to work and completed another set of drawings which made his invention of infinitely more value. Before he had time to get his [illegible]

HAIGHT & FREESE CO. IN RECEIVERS' HANDS

Concern Had 20,000 Customers and More Than 70 Branches.

CHARGES OF FRAUD MADE

Complainant Swears That Orders Were Not Executed, but Suckstedt, and That Accounts Were Juggled.

The Haight & Freese Company, with offices in this city at 53 Broadway and 215 West One Hundred and Twenty-third Street, was yesterday placed in the hands of receivers on the complaints of fourteen customers, who allege that the concern is not only insolvent, but has been defrauding them, and that the officers of the concern have been extracting from it money to which they were not entitled.

Walter B. Edmonds, a patent lawyer of this city, was appointed receiver for the company for this circuit by Judge Lacombe of the United States Circuit Court on the application of Ridgway Bowker of Camden, N. J., who asserts that the company defrauded him of $3,800. His application was accompanied by a decision recently rendered in the Supreme Court of this State by Justice Victor M. Dowling which holds that the company has been conducting a fraudulent business.

The affidavits and testimony on which Judge Dowling's decision was based reveal in detail the methods of buckstalking in cheating their customers.

The Haight & Freese Company, or the men in control of the concern, have been active in the management of the Consolidated Stock Exchange of Philadelphia, which is now in the hands of receivers and against which the Attorney General of Pennsylvania has brought an action for the annullment of its charter for fraudulent practices. The company had branches in Philadelphia, Boston, and seventy smaller cities. It is said to have had more than 20,000 customers, and frequently to have cleared transactions of 70,000 shares a day, more than some of the biggest commission houses of the New York Stock Exchange.

The Haight & Freese Company is a corporation. The officers, according to the testimony of a former employe and Director, have been drawing large salaries. One of the former owners—Pressey—is said to be living in London, after having accumulated a fortune of $1,000,000 out of the concern.

TROUBLES HAVE BEEN GROWING.

The troubles of the Haight & Freese Company have been gradually coming to a climax. The agitation against the Consolidated Stock Exchange of Philadelphia has caused them a heavy loss in business, as well as unpleasant inquiries from customers. Nevertheless, the offices were open yesterday morning for business, and about seventy-five customers were assembled watching the quotation board when news was received from Boston that, on the complaint of a Mrs. Weiss, a receiver for the Boston office had been appointed in the United States Circuit Court.

The representatives of the company here said the action was "spite work," but a number of customers withdrew their accounts, and the cashier was still engaged in paying off those who desired to get out when the receiver appointed by Judge Lacombe appeared, locked up the safe, and took charge of the office.

The receiver appointed in Boston is James D. Colt, son of a former Supreme Court Justice of that State, and a well-known lawyer. Mr. Edmonds, who was appointed receiver by Judge Lacombe in this city, is an ancillary receiver to assist Receiver Colt in the discharge of his duties. Similar ancillary receivers were appointed for every United States circuit in which the company is believed to have assets.

Ridgway Bowker in his complaint asserts that in July, 1903, he went to the company's office, attracted thither by its advertisements, and opened an account. According to his statement, George O. Turner, the manager of the Philadelphia office, who is also an officer and Director of the concern, introduced him to one Daniels, who was represented as a very clever person who thoroughly understood the art of speculating and could turn a few hundred dollars into thousands without much trouble. Bowker signed a power of attorney to Daniels.

Mr. Daniels's ability failed him with the Bowker account, and in October, 1903, Bowker was informed that because of a slump in stocks his margin of $3,350 had been wiped out. He made a protest, and the concern in order to avoid trouble "reinstated" him on its books, but on Jan. 1, 1904, it again informed him that he was wiped out.

SAYS IT WAS A BUCKET SHOP.

Mr. Bowker says in his complaint that he supposed the concern was a bona fide brokerage concern, but that he now knows that it is a bucket shop, which does no legitimate business, but is conducted merely for the purpose of defrauding the public. He alleges that the company has no capital, and that it neither buys nor sells stocks except when it has to in order to make good the demand of some customer. He asked for a temporary injunction to prevent the concern from paying out moneys to any one except the receiver. This injunction was granted, and the order to make it permanent is to be argued as soon as possible.

One of the curious features of Bowker's transactions with the concern was, he says, that when they "reinstated" him after having informed him that his margins were wiped out, they asked him to carry his account in two names. One of these was his own name and the other was that of L. Rothschild. This, it is now asserted by the attorney for Bowker, was done to facilitate the operations of the concern.

The company had a proviso printed on all order slips by which it was permitted to cross a customer's orders against those of another customer. That is, if one customer gave an order to buy a certain stock at a certain price the company reserved the right to offset that purchase with the sale of a similar amount of stock at the same price by another customer on any Exchange in any city, or, if preferred, at private sale. This gave them wide latitude, but Justice Dowling in his decision, said this provision was against public policy, and therefore void.

These methods of the concern were set forth in detail in an affidavit by Albert [illegible] Jennings, a former employe [illegible] of the company, made in the suit of William C. Haight against the concern, which was recently decided against the company. William C. Haight is no connection of the Haight after whom the company is named in part.

SWEARS OFFICERS SOLD OUT.

In this affidavit Johnson swore that while he was a Director of the company W. H. Sommerville, then President, and one Campbell sold out to George G. Turner and W. H. Lillis. The salary of Vice President Lillis was fixed by vote of the Directors at $50,000, and that of George G. Turner as Assistant Treasurer and Manager at $25,000. When Campbell and Sommerville left in 1903 Turner and Lillis took over the property.

According to Johnson's affidavit no orders were executed. No stocks were bought and no stocks were sold where the accounts were on margin; but the next quotation received over the wire was used as the price at which the order was filled by the company. They did buy and sell some cash stocks, that is to say, where the delivery of the stock was required by the customer and paid for in full.

The company never had any certificates of stock in its possession, says Johnson, except certificates of stock deposited by customers as margin. There were exceptional instances where trades were actually given to either the Consolidated or the New York Stock Exchange brokers. Those exceptional cases were cases where a customer required names to be furnished to him or where he was fortunate in his speculation and they purchased the stock to protect themselves against his transactions.

After receiving instructions, Johnson ordered the bookkeepers in the Buffalo office to draw up what purported to be a copy of the Haight account.

"In order to do this," Johnson says, "they had to find the names of other persons who had given orders to buy and sell, which would answer to cross a purchase or sale made by Haight." He said they could not find a sufficient number of names to cross with all the transactions in Haight's account. Then, he said, Mr. Campbell told him to enter a lot of names in blotters giving dates, names, amounts, and commissions. "These were the books," swore Johnson, "that were exhibited to Haight in the action in the Supreme Court. For those trades of Haight for which he could find no cross trades in the sheets newspaper quotations were taken."

NO REGULAR BOOKS, SAID JOHNSON.

The company, Johnson said, had no regular books showing its capital account. It kept two accounts in the ledger in the names of William Broadhurst and one Luke. Neither of these accounts was a real account, according to Johnson. It was the practice of the defendant to use these accounts to withdraw moneys from the corporation's assets by giving fictitious orders in said accounts showing large profits, which profits were drawn out by the officers of the company, Turner and Lillis. Many of these orders were given after the close of the market, so as to show profits.

The decision rendered by Justice Dowling in the case of which this affidavit by Johnson was a part, severely scores the Haight & Freese Company. From this decision it appears that the company charged double commissions and added so many charges that a customer had to have more than average luck to make a profit.

Of the transactions, so far as the company was concerned, the decision said they were "fictitious sales and bogus purchases."

"It appears clearly," said the decision, "that the only thing done by this company was to take the money of the plaintiff, falsely represent that it had bought the stock and ask for more margin."

The officers of the company now do not include a President. George G. Turner, known as a Director and manager, and William H. Lillis, a Director, Vice President, and Treasurer, are supposed to be the chief backers of the concern.

There were rumors, however, yesterday that "Al" Adams had recently purchased an interest in the syndicate of which the Haight & Freese Company was said to have been a member. This interest is said to have formerly belonged to Mahoney, the poolroom king.

SEVERAL BRANCHES CLOSE.

Managers of Some Say They Expect to Reopen To-day.

BOSTON, May 9.—The Haight & Freese Company, stock brokers of 85 State Street, this city, went into the hands of receivers to-day, and their offices in this State are closed. The concern was petitioned into receivership proceedings by Mrs. Anna L. H. Weiss of Needham, Mass., administratrix of the estate of her husband.

Mrs. Weiss charged in her petition that her husband was induced by the company to pay on margins an aggregate of $5,380. After his death she was told that there was due to her on her husband's account only $160. She alleges in her petition that the whole account was fraudulent.

William H. Lillis, Treasurer of the company, said to-night:

"Application will be made to the court to-morrow for a cancellation of the receivership, and shortly thereafter we will be doing business as usual."

WORCESTER, May 9.—The offices of the Haight & Freese Company, in this city, are closed to-day, and no information is obtainable relative to the intentions of the local management.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., May 9.—The New Haven, Bridgeport, and Hartford branches of the Haight & Freese Company continued business as usual throughout the day. The receivership was declared to be only a temporary matter. In New London the local manager received an order from Boston to suspend business late in the day.

$5,000 LETTER THIEF CAUGHT.

Police Recover Much Plunder with the Arrest of Fred Landau.

Fred Landau of 421 Fifth Street, arrested Monday night while ransacking a room in the Fifth Avenue Hotel, was indentified yesterday as the person who recently offered a $5,000 letter of credit to a clerk at the Morton Trust Company for $700, and fled when questioned. The leter of credit, which was stolen that day from the room of Walter W. Adams at the Park Avenue Hotel, was not recovered when Landau's room was searched, but $1,500 worth of jewelry found there proved to have been stolen from Mrs. A. T. Stanwood, a guest at the Hotel Savoy, on May 1.

Central Office detectives in Jefferson Market Court said Landau had promised to aid them in recovering the letter of credit, which he had not cashed, and other stolen property, and Magistrate Cornell remanded him to their custody for forty-eight hours.

HODEIDA, Yemen, May 9.—The spoils captured by the rebels at Sana'a included thirty guns, 20,000 rifles, and much ammunition.

SAYS SHE KILLED HUSBAND.

Drank a Glass of Wood Alcohol After the Murder to Follow Him.

Special to The New York Times.

PITTSBURG, Penn., May 9.—Superintendent John Glenn of the Allegheny police says that Mrs. Annie L. Mickle confessed to him to-night that she killed her husband in a struggle to defend herself from him last Saturday afternoon at their home, 700 Cedar Avenue, Allegheny. She was taken to the county jail. The Mickles formerly lived in Philadelphia. She said to Superintendent Glenn:

"I drank a glass of wood alcohol. He always told me that if he died first I was to drink it and follow him, as he was so jealous he did not want me to marry another man. After drinking the wood alcohol I wrote a letter to Allen Wheeler."

M'CARREN SMOTHERS ICENSURE VOTE ON GAS

Manages to Table Resolution in Kings County Committee.

MEETING IS IN AN UPROAR

Chairman Declares an Adjournment and Members Withdraw, Not at All Harmonious.

The boasted, new-made harmony among the Brooklyn Democrats was sadly shattered last night at a meeting of the Kings County General Committee. At the same time Senator Patrick H. McCarren showed that if he had not a majority of the committee with him, he at least had Chairman James D. Bell, who followed his every direction.

The trouble arose when resolutions were presented by John B. Shanahan, a member of the committee from the Eleventh Assembly District, which is controlled by James Shevlin, an adversary of McCarren's. The Shanahan resolutions follow:

Whereas, In deference to a strong and widespread sentiment of the gas consumers of the City of New York for relief from the intolerable extortion of a private monopoly, there was introduced in the Legislature a bill fixing the maximum legal rate of gas to consumers other than the city at 80 cents per 1,000 cubic feet, a reduction of 20 cents per thousand over the existing rate.

Whereas, This bill was drawn by a committee of the Legislature composed of members of both political parties, and represented the conclusions unanimously reached by the committee as a result of an inquiry into the lighting conditions in this city, and after a full, exhaustive, and impartial hearing.

Whereas, This bill met the approval of the press of New York, irrespective of party, as voicing public sentiment, and was indorsed by the Democratic Mayor of New York as affording essential and necessary relief from intolerable conditions to millions of gas consumers.

Resolved, That the Democratic County Committee of Kings County takes this earliest opportunity to place upon record its displeasure and condemnation of the Democratic Senators from this county who, having to choose between the interest of a private monopoly and the public welfare, in disregard of their solemn obligations to the people, and utterly indifferent to the welfare of their party, ranged themselves unanimously on the side of monopoly and against the people, contributing to the defeat of this important and meritorious measure.

When Mr. Shanahan finished reading this resolution there was a round of vigorous applause, but it quickly subsided as Senator McCarren was seen standing, with his face, usually pale, now flushed. His shoulders were squared as if he was ready for a fight, but there was no change in the tones of his voice as he said:

"I move that the resolutions be laid on the table."

Instantly there was a clamor, and in the midst of it Daniel Moynahan, President of the Brooklyn Democratic Club, and member of the committee from the Seventh District, began to raise the point of order that the resolution could not be laid upon the table, when Chairman Bell's gavel fell and he announced that a vote would be taken on the motion to lay upon the table. A vote was taken, and although many thought that the nays were more vigorous than the yeas, he declared the resolution was laid on the table.

Then there was an uproar. James Shevlin stood up and shouted a demand for a roll call, while all over the hall men were standing and calling to Chairman Bell to change his ruling. But above the noise came the voice of Senator McCarren again, this time moving an adjournment. The Chairman grasped the situation quickly, and swinging his gavel to the desk with a crash he declared the meeting adjourned.

"Lots of harmony, isn't there?" inquired a delegate.

Mr. Shevlin turned quickly, and retorted:

"We'd have shown them how much harmony there was if they had given us a roll call."

ASK ODELL'S ADVICE ON GAS.

Republican Leaders Wish to Again Put Tammany on Record.

Chairman Odell of the Republican State Committee has been asked by cable to communicate his views as to the advisability of including the gas question in the call for a special session to be issued by Gov. Higgins.

Mr. Murphy has declared that the Tammany Senators who voted against the 80-cent gas bill did so in violation of his positive instructions.

The Republican leaders are very much opposed to permitting Mr. Murphy to pose as a champion of cheap gas. It is held that Tammany should be compelled to again put itself on record on the gas question, and that Gov. Higgins can do this by making the 80-cent gas bill one of the measures to be taken up at the special session.

R. Fulton Cutting, President of the Citizens' Union, yesterday had something to say about the attitude of the Tammany Senators with respect to cheaper gas.

"I cannot see how members of the Legislature from this city could vote against a measure which so greatly concerned the people as the 80-cent gas bill," said Mr. Cutting. "I should like to give those legislators a chance to explain their votes. Last week must have been very profitable to some people in Albany."

The Stevens bills, which fix the price of gas to the city at 75 cents and permit the city to use its water power to generate electricity, reached Mayor McClellan yesterday.

Henry J. Hemmens, counsel to the New York Edison Company, yesterday announced that his company would make no fight against the bill reducing the price of electricity from 15 cents to 10 cents per kilowatt hour. He said the company would accept the law and try to live up to it.

SISTER ILL, FITZGERALD SAID.

Couldn't Attend Gas Meeting—Palmer "Too Hoarse" to Explain.

Senator John C. Fitzgerald, who was scheduled to tell the followers of Tammany Leader Julius Harburger of the Tenth Assembly District at the meeting held at the clubrooms, 42 Second Avenue, last night why he and four of his Tammany Hall colleagues had voted against the eighty-cent gas bill, sent word that "his sister was ill," and he could not be present.

The crowd felt disappointed, and their disappointment was enhanced when Under Sheriff Harburger read a telegram from Mr. Palmer, minority leader of the Assembly, saying he was so hoarse he was unable to speak.

William J. O'Sullivan, Assistant Corporation Counsel, took up the defense. It was a Republican Legislature, he said, that refused to give New York cheaper gas. Instead, the Republican Legislature had created a State Commission, and it would be for the people of New York to judge whether that commission would do what is promised, and reduce the price of gas.

WILD WEST COSSACKS STRIKE.

Afterward Repent, but Col. Cody Refuses to Take Them Back.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, May 9.—The Russian strike movement is spreading. The Cossacks who have been performing at Buffalo Bill's Wild West Show have struck for higher wages and have been turned by the management into the streets, where they are to be seen wandering about disconsolately.

They are now anxious to resume their part in the performances, but, as they deliberately broke a contract which secured for them about five times as much as their average earnings at home, Col. Cody refuses to take them back, and is already drilling another troupe of Cossacks to take their places. He is also suing the strikers for damages, and the case will be tried on Thursday.

The strike leaders threatened those of their comrades who hesitated to join them, declaring that their homes would be burned and their families massacred after their return to Russia.

FIGHT FOR TEFFT ESTATE.

Testimony That New Yorker Wanted to Build Windowless House.

Special to The New York Times.

PITTSFIELD, Mass., May 9.—New testimony relating to the mental condition of Frank Griswold Tefft, late of New York, was brought into the contested will case in the Berkshire Supreme Court to-day.

Mr. Tefft died suddenly in Great Barrington on Nov. 5, 1903, leaving a will by which Miss Helen M. Whitney of Boston, the daughter of Rufus Whitney, a dry goods merchant, received all his estate, estimated at $110,000, with the exception of $1,000, which was bequeathed to his only son, Erastus T. Tefft of New York. Mr. Tefft had been living apart from his family, and his son had not visited his father for several years.

When Mr. Tefft arrived in Great Barrington he found Miss Whitney in possession of the Tefft residence. The Berkshire courts were appealed to, and papers were granted allowing Erastus T. Tefft to take possession of the property. Then followed the filing of Mr. Tefft's will and a contest in the Berkshire Probate Court, where the will was allowed, and which to-day came up again on an appeal.

John L. E. Pell of Great Barrington, who married a niece of Mr. Tefft, testified to many marked peculiarities in Mr. Tefft's mental condition about the time the will was drawn. One of Mr. Tefft's ideas was to build a house without any windows, so that the people in Great Barrington would not know all that was going on. Another was to build a place back in a small mountain village, where privacy would be possible. His country house, he said, he would turn into a clubhouse.

Lawyer Duncan McIntyre, William Ellison, and Dr. Stafford of New York, witnesses of the will, testified that Mr. Tefft was in sound mental condition at the time the will was executed.

The case will be continued to-morrow.

Frank Griswold Tefft, who was a member of the dry goods firm of Tefft, Weller & Co., retired from business in 1902, when his physicians told him he needed a rest. He went to his country seat, known as Griswold Lodge, at Great Barrington. It was then reported that he and Miss Whitney were engaged to be married. Tefft's wife having obtained a divorce from him in 1890 and having married again.

On Nov. 9, 1903, when he died at his Great Barrington home, Miss Whitney was at his bedside, and announced that she and Tefft had intended to make public the fact that they were engaged to be married.

HARLEM CENTRE FOR JEWS.

Modeled on Lines of Educational Alliance—Work Started.

The Talmud Thora Association and the Educational Institute, comprising the leading representatives of the Jewish race in Harlem, having completed plans for the establishment of an uptown centre for work among the young of the race, yesterday purchased, through David Cohen, a plot of ground on East One Hundred and Eleventh Street, on which a building modeled upon the same general lines as that of the Educational Alliance will be immediately erected.

Within the past decade, it is estimated by President Cohen of the Talmud Thora Association, from 175,000 to 200,000 children of the Jewish race have moved to Harlem. The northward movement made necessary such a building as is now determined upon. There are about 400 members in the association, of which Mr. Cohen is President, and about 300 members of the Institute.

"The building will in all probability be known as the Jewish Educational Institute," said Mr. Cohen yesterday. "The site selected for it is now occupied by six frame houses, 132 to 142 East One Hundred and Eleventh Street. A more central location could not have been found. Work was begun yesterday in tearing down the buildings now on the property.

The institute will cost from $125,000 to $150,000. Although the undertaking is essentially Jewish, the institute will be absolutely non-sectarian in its workings. The youth of all nationalities and creeds will be welcome to its advantages. It will be supported by voluntary contributions.

EARNED $12.50, GETS $600.

Middletown Architect Had Accepted Mining Shares for Services.

Special to The New York Times.

MIDDLETOWN, N. Y., May 9.—Frederick Posel, a German architect of this city, has just received a check for $600 in payment for a bill of $12.50 he had against the Herold des Glaubens, a German newspaper published in St. Louis.

Eight years ago Posel wrote a number of articles for the paper. Instead of cash, for his services he got ten shares of mining stock, supposed to be worthless. Being unable to dispose of his stock, he put it away and forgot it. Recently he received a letter from the manager of the paper, who remembered giving the stock to Posel. The stock had become valuable, being that of the Colorado Copper Mining Company. Posel investigated, and sold his ten shares of stock for $60 per share.

AMBASSADOR CHOATE BECOMES A BENCHER

Middle Temple Rules Suspended in His Honor.

A BRIEF, SIMPLE CEREMONY

Repast in the Dining Hall Once Opened by Queen Elizabeth and in Which Shakespeare Acted.

LONDON, May 9.—Ambassador Choate was formally called to the bench of the Middle Temple to-night. The ceremony was strictly private, not even members of other Inns of Court being present. The function took the form of an ordinary dinner in the old dining hall which Queen Elizabeth opened in 1570, and in which, before Queen Elizabeth, Shakespeare acted in "As You Like It."

Several rules were suspended to-night in honor of the American Ambassador. The members, fully robed, took up places about bare oaken tables, and the benchers filed in, Mr. Choate leading the parade, though the newest member is usually last. The benchers passed down the centre of the assembly to a raised table. The usual simple meal was served. The benchers afterward retired to the Parliament Chamber for dessert, Mr. Choate this time walking last.

As he passed the members' tables the assembly cheered continuously, many old lawyers in their enthusiasm jumping on top of the wooden tables. At the door Mr. Choate turned and faced the assembly, and said they knew it was not the custom for a bencher to speak, and therefore he would not. Nevertheless, he spoke for ten minutes, expressing appreciation of his reception and the honor of having his name enrolled among the names of the great men of the Middle Temple.

The entire proceedings occupied only half an hour.

Mr. Choate was elected a Master of the Bench of the Middle Temple on April 10. Five signers of the Declaration of Independence were members of the Middle Temple, but since that time until the election of Mr. Choate no American has been a member.

TO HONOR CHOATE.

AUTO CARS ON RAILROADS.

Will Become General in Future, Congress Delegates Predict.

WASHINGTON, May 9.—"Traffic conveyed by automobiles," discussed by Sections 4 and 5 jointly, was presented to the Railway Congress to-day in joint report by Chief Engineer Keromnes, Traffic Manager Leichelle, and Chief Electrician E. Sartiaux of the French Northern Railway.

The conclusion is reached that the use of automobiles or auto cars run on railroads where traffic is light will become general in the future owing to saving of expense in operation and maintenance.

The delegates to the Congress were the guests of the American Railway Association to-night.

Two tours have been arranged for the delegates. They will leave Washington Sunday, May 14, and reach New York Tuesday, May 23, visiting the cities of Pittsburg, Cleveland, Buffalo, Niagara Falls, Schenectady, and Boston. The other tour will comprise visits to Pittsburg, Cleveland, Cincinnati, St. Louis, Chicago, Montreal, Saratoga, Albany, and New York, reaching the latter city May 27.

ACROSS ATLANTIC 300 TIMES.

Kaiser Wilhelm II. Dresses Ship in Honor of Veteran Chief Engineer.

Ship was dressed as the big North German Lloyd liner Kaiser Wilhelm II. came in from Bremen yesterday, in honor of Chief Engineer Carl Baum, who then completed his three hundredth trip across the Atlantic. The celebration was a surprise to Mr. Baum, from the moment he left his room to go on watch and found the figures "300" blazing above the door of his room in electric lights of many colors. All through the day congratulations were showered upon him by his brother officers.

Engineer Baum has sailed with the North German Lloyds since he took to the sea, forty years ago, and with this voyage has covered a total of 2,346,832 miles of sea travel. He has seen the company's fleet grow from four old iron boats, when he stepped on the Hansa's deck, to 200 steel vessels.

Chief Baum has never had an accident. The nearest he came to it was while Chief of the Kaiser Wilhelm der Grosse tied up at Hoboken during the Bremen dock fire.

AUTO RAN INTO TRAIN.

Mrs. W. C. Fisk of Jersey City Severely Injured in Midnight Accident.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW BRUNSWICK, May 9.—Mrs. Willard C. Fisk of 17 Bentley Avenue, Jersey City, had a leg and arm broken when her husband's automobile collided with a freight train at the Pennsylvania Railroad crossing at Iselin, seven miles from here, at 1 o'clock this morning.

In the automobile were Mr. Fisk, his son, Mrs. Fisk, and the chauffeur. The machine was running at high speed when it approached the railroad track on a sharp curve. All of the occupants were thrown out, but Mrs. Fisk was the only one seriously injured. The motor ran broadside into the freight train and was completely wrecked. After being attended by a neighborhood physician, the injured woman was taken to her home in Jersey City.

NEW DISPUTE WITH CANADA.

We Ask England to Prevent the Removal of the St. John River Dam.

WASHINGTON, May 9.—Secretary Taft late to-day sent for Mr. O'Beirne, the British Chargé d'Affaires, and requested him to ask the British Government that no immediate action be taken by the New Brunswick authorities looking to the removal of the obstruction in the St. John River. That such action was contemplated was communicated to Secretary Taft to-day by the Department of Justice.

There is a large dam in the St. John, and the case involves a question of equitable distribution of the water for power purposes. The Canadian authorities have contended that the scope of the Deep Water Commission included an investigation of the St. John River, while the Washington Government has taken the position that the river was not to be so included. There has been considerable anxiety on the part of the Canadians lest the obstruction in the river should not be removed, and there have been threats that the Canadians might take the matter into their own hands.

As a result of the conference between Secretary Taft and Mr. O'Beirne to-day it is believed the way has been paved for a temporary adjustment of the difficulty.

A BIG LITTLE FIRE.

Policeman Thought $2,000, Storekeeper $1,500, Fireman Said $5 Loss.

There was a fire in the basement of the five-story brick building at 467-469 Sixth Avenue late yesterday afternoon. The ground floor is occupied by Maurice Rogaliner, a clothier. The policeman who reported the fire said the damage amounted to $2,000; the proprietor of the store said $1,500, and the firemen thought $5 about right.

The little blaze was in a pile of rubbish in the basement. Mrs. Mary Glaser of 255 West One Hundred and Twelfth Street owns the building. Her estimate of the damage has not been learned yet.

McADOO LOPS OFF 57 POLICE HEADS AT A BLOW

Two Inspectors, 10 Captains, and 45 Sergeants Retired.

DISABILITY AS THE REASON

Inspector Cortright, Who Tried to Resign Some Time Ago, Is Retained as Chief.

Police Commissioner McAdoo announced yesterday the forced retirement of two Inspectors, ten Captains, and forty-five Sergeants on the ground of physical unfitness for service. The retirements took effect from the moment the order was issued at Police Headquarters. This was a little after noon, and by last night all the men involved were out of the department.

The Inspectors, Captains, and Sergeants retired yesterday constitute only a part of those that have been ordered before the Board of Surgeons for physical examination. While the Commissioner would not say so yesterday, it is known that this is only the beginning, and that he intends to go over every grade of the service from Inspector down and weed out what he terms the "deadwood." The physical disability restriction is the only way open to the Commissioner in this weeding process without his action being open to reversal by the courts.

Other Inspectors in the group ordered before the Board of Surgeons simultaneously with those retired yesterday were Chief Inspector Moses Cortright and Inspector Kane of the Borough of Queens and Brooks of the Borough of Manhattan.

A week ago Inspector Cortright tendered his resignation to the Commissioner, who declined to accept it, and asked him to remain in the service at least until after the police parade. When Mr. McAdoo's attention was called to this and he was questioned with reference to his future intentions regarding Inspector Cortright, he said:

"That incident is now closed. Inspector Cortright still remains Chief Inspector, and that is all there is to that."

The retirements promulgated yesterday were as follows:

INSPECTORS.

Thomas L. Druhan, Tenth Inspection District, Brooklyn.
Elbert O. Smith, Fifth Inspection District, Manhattan.

CAPTAINS.

Nathaniel N. Shire, East Thirty-fifth Street Station, Manhattan.
Joseph C. Gehegan, Macdougal Street Station, Manhattan.
Michael Foody, King's Bridge Station, Bronx.
John C. Buchanan, Gates Avenue Station, Brooklyn.
Dennis Driscoll, Butler Street Station, Brooklyn.
James Reynolds, Fifth Avenue Station, Brooklyn.
Edward J. Kenney, Atlantic Avenue Station, Brooklyn.
Michael McNamara, Prospect Park Station, Brooklyn.
Michael Gorman, College Point Station, Queens.
Robert P. Hickman, Jamaica Station, Queens.

SERGEANTS.

Detective Sergeants Joseph Price and John F. Burns of the Brooklyn Detective Bureau; Sergts. Robert Halfpenny, Central Office, Manhattan; Richard Batton, Telegraph Bureau, Manhattan; James Campbell, James Keenan, and Thomas Williams, Telegraph Bureau, Brooklyn; Joseph A. Saul and Patrick McNally, Old Slip Station, Manhattan; Daniel J. Reardon and William H. Kelly, Fulton Street Station, Brooklyn; Samuel Hancock, Atlantic Avenue Station, Brooklyn; Francis McGrath, Grand Avenue Station, Brooklyn; Thomas N. Hughes and Isaac S. Tichenor, Fort Hamilton Station, Brooklyn; Robert Groves, Parkville Station, Brooklyn; Charles L. Schauwecker, Eldridge Street Station, Manhattan; Michael O'Meara, Charles Street Station, Manhattan; Archibald A. Black, Bedford Avenue Station, Brooklyn; William A. White, Lee Avenue Station, Brooklyn; David Rogers, Bath Beach Station, Brooklyn; Thomas Ireel, Far Rockaway Station, Queens; Richard A. Magan, Morrisania Station, Bronx; Thomas Morgan, East Thirty-fifth Street Station, Manhattan; Henry Metcalf, Borough Hall Station, Brooklyn; John O'Reilly, De Kalb Avenue Station, Brooklyn; Walter Norris, Leonard Street Station, Manhattan; Christopher J. Doyle, Amity Street Station, Brooklyn; James J. Kenney, Macdougal Street Station, Manhattan; Charles D. Foster, Canarsie Station, Brooklyn; Albert W. McDonald, Long Island City Station, Queens; Joseph H. Simons, Stagg Street Station, Brooklyn; Oliver Timms, West Twentieth Street Station, Manhattan; John Ryan, Delancey Street Station, Manhattan; Jonas Evans, Prospect Park Station, Brooklyn; George W. Hamer, Newtown Station, Queens; William A. Nelson, Gates Avenue Station, Brooklyn; Harry Hurlburt, Fourth Avenue Station, Brooklyn; Edward F. Phillips, Brooklyn Bridge Station, Manhattan; John Hamilton and Jacob Welsing, Grand Central Station, Manhattan; John McNamara, West One Hundred and Fifty-second Street Station, Manhattan; William J. Morgan, Central Park Station, Manhattan; Charles A. Place, West Thirtieth Street Station, Manhattan, and Patrick Leonard, Oak Street Station, Manhattan.

It may be merely a coincidence that nearly all these men are either Republicans or Democrats of the lukewarm variety. Both the Inspectors are Republicans. The Captains are Republicans with two exceptions, and neither of these has been known to be very active in support of Tammany. In Brooklyn, where the axe fell so heavily, a large majority of the Captains and Sergeants are Republicans.

These retirements leave seventeen vacancies for the rank of Captain and four vacancies for Inspector. There is only one name on the civil service eligible list for an Inspector's place, that of Capt. Sylvester D. Baldwin, who was reduced from the rank of Inspector together with Inspector Charles L. Albertson, now retired, to make place for Inspectors Cross and Grant when they were reinstated by the courts.

Capt. Baldwin has been known as a capable and honest police official. Commissioner McAdoo sought to induce him to accept his reduction in rank with good grace or retire, but Baldwin refused and took his case to the courts, where it now is. The Commissioner said last night that Capt. Baldwin would not be appointed to any of the four inspectorships, and that he would wait to make his appointments until examinations for eligibility now under way have been completed and the new list has been placed in his hands. On the eligible list for Captaincies there are twenty-three names more than sufficient to fill all the existing vacancies. On the Sergeants' eligible list there are only fourteen names. The Commissioner said that he had ordered a new list made up.

Commissioner McAdoo retired three Sergeants who stood high on the eligible list for Captain. They were Sergt. Schauwecker of the Eldridge Street Station, who stood first; Sergt. Place of the Tenderloin, whose name was ninth on the list, and Sergt. Leonard of the Oak Street Station, who was No. 14.

Commissioner McAdoo was asked whether all the officers disqualified by the Board of Surgeons in recent examinations were included in yesterday's large list of forced retirements.

"I don't deem it necessary or proper to make public the result of these examinations," said the Commissioner. "It is sufficient to state that the Board of Surgeons has certified to me that the officers retired are permanently unfit for duty."

The Commissioner said that the vacancies would be filled temporarily under the direction of Chief Inspector Cortright, and that later on he would make acting assignments himself to the various grades from the rank below. None of the temporary assignments was given out last night, except the assignment of Inspector George Titus, now in charge of the Borough of the Bronx, who was directed to take over temporarily in addition the Harlem District left vacant by the retirement of Inspector Smith.

CAPT. SHIRE'S FRIENDS ANGRY

His Retirement Attributed to Influence of Poolroom Keepers.

Friends of Capt. Nathaniel Shire were indignant last night in their denunciation of his retirement by Commissioner McAdoo for alleged physical disability. They attributed his retirement to the virulent hostility of poolroom keepers and excise law violators.

One man, very close to the Captain himself, said that more than a year ago the liquor dealers of the precinct tried to buy the right to violate the excise laws for a cash contribution of $1,000.

Only four months ago, this same authority declared, the poolroom men offered Capt. Shire $225 a week if he would not be so hard on them. Capt. Shire at once raided everything in the district under suspicion.

TWENTY-SIX LIVES LOST IN A KANSAS TORNADO

Swath 100 Yards Wide Cut Through Town of Marquette.

RESCUERS FIND 44 INJURED

Several Dying in Hospital—Two Carried 500 Feet on Bed and Landed Unhurt.

MARQUETTE, Kan., May 9.—When darkness fell to-night it was known that twenty-six lives had been lost in the tornado that wrecked part of Marquette early to-day and did much damage in this vicinity, and that forty-four persons had been injured. Of the injured thirty-five were seriously hurt and some may die. During the day Carl Warnquist and Mrs. J. A. Carlson died of injuries. Several others are suffering from broken limbs and internal injuries.

The list of identified dead follows: Gus Anderson, Tillie Ellerson, Mrs. A. V. Anderson, Mrs. Elmer Hultgren, Blanche Switzer, Lera Switzer, Nina Switzer, Anna Coulson, M. P. Nelson, wife, and three children; A. Sjogren, Sr., Olaf Hanson and wife, Gottfried Nelson, wife, and child; Elmer Nelson, Mrs. Postier and child, Nina Roberts, Carl Wainquist, Mrs. J. A. Carlson, and Clyde Norris.

To-night order had been brought out of the chaotic condition, and a relief committee had begun wark. Twenty-five pupils from Bethany College came to assist as nurses.

The business section suffered little damage. The Swedish, Luther, and Methodist churches, the Opera House block, and dozens of residences are in ruins. The tornado came from the south, and made a clean sweep of 100 yards through the town. Sleeping families were caught up in the whirlwind without a moment's warning. A heavy rainstorm preceded the tornado.

Marquette, in McPherson County, has 1,500 residents. It is the exact centre of Kansas, and in the richest farming country in the State. When the missing in Marquette had been accounted for the searchers directed their attention to the surrounding country. Soon half a dozen wagonloads of dead and injured had been brought in from the district to the south.

There were many narrow escapes. The infant daughter of Charles Sallon was lifted in her bed and carried to the middle of the street, receiving only a few scratches. Sallon and his wife were seriously injured. The mattress on which the baby daughter of the Rev. Mr. Smith Lay was doubled up in such a manner as to cover the child and protect it from falling timbers. In spite of the destruction of the Smith home, the family was unhurt. Mr. and Mrs. O. S. Ellvin were carried on their bed 500 feet and laid down without being seriously hurt.

ASTOR LOOT IN BOX CAR.

Rhinebeck Burglars Had Their Plunder Loaded to Ship to New York.

Charged in the Tombs Court yesterday with having helped to rob John Jacob Astor's home at Rhinebeck, John Larkin, a "yeggman," did not attempt to make denial. Instead he laughed, and boasted of the cleverness with which he and his companions had done the work.

It was early Saturday evening that the Astor Summer home at Rhinebeck was entered by thieves. The vandals apparently amused themselves by destroying such furniture and bric-a-brac as they could not carry away. The débris of what had been several thousand dollars' worth of furniture was found scattered over the floors after they had left.

The Poughkeepsie police kept close watch on the New York Central yards, where criminals try to steal rides to safety. A railroad detective, passing through the yards Sunday night, caught sight of a broken car door. Peeping inside he saw two men. Calling other officers to his assistance, the two men were caught. They said they were Charles Jackson of Maryland and James Quinn of Massachusetts.

In the car were boxes containing more than a thousand dollars' worth of plunder taken from the Astor home. The two captives told the police of an appointment they had with a third man whom they intended to meet in this city at Seventy-second Street and Riverside Drive. Chief McCabe telephoned to Inspector O'Brien, and a general alarm was sent out.

Patrolman Johnston caught Larkin on Riverside Drive, and he was identified by tattoo marks on his hands. All three are now in jail.

ARBITRATION BOARD FORMS.

Otto M. Eidlitz Is Unanimously Elected Its President.

The first meeting of the new General Arbitration Board of the Building Trades Employers' Association and the building trades unions was held last night in the Building Trades' Club and permanent organization was effected by the election of officers. The Brotherhood of Carpenters, which is now at peace with the employers, was represented among the thirty-two trades which sent delegates. The General Arbitration Board consists of two members from each union and trade association of employers.

It was expected that there would be a contest for the office of Chairman of the board, but there was no opposition at all when Otto M. Eidlitz of the Mason Builders' Association, the Chairman, was named for the office to succeed himself. D. J. O'Mahony of the Steam Fitters' Union was elected Vice Chairman. Both will hold office for six months.

Samuel B. Donnelly, who had been appointed Secretary when the Building Trades Employers' Association was formed and paid by the employers, was elected Secretary, to serve for a year. His salary, which is $3,000 a year, will beginning with to-day be paid jointly by the employers and the unions.

The difference between OXZYN BALM and almost all other preparations with which you are invited to renew the charm of your deteriorated complexion is the difference between eradicating and merely covering up the cause of the evil.

If when your house needed painting or your walls needed papering you could procure something which would remove the soiled, weather-stained exterior and make a beautiful fresh covering appear in its place, you would call it magic.

Well, that's what OXZYN BALM actually does to the human skin. It isn't magic, either, just nature aided to assert herself; all other methods are merely covering dirt with fresh paint.

ROJESTVENSKY HARD TO LOSE

Returns to Kong-Hai After Sailing Away, and Then Breaks His Promise to Take to the Open Sea.

LONDON TIMES—NEW YORK TIMES.
Special Cable. Copyright, 1905.

PARIS, May 9.—I have just received information that Admiral Rojestvensky's fleet to-day left the bay in which it took refuge after leaving Hon-Kohe Bay, and which is supposed to be the Bay of Phang-Wang.

It was presumably on an imperative summons from Admiral de Jonquières that Rojestvensky left, as the French Admiral witnessed the Russians' departure.

By The Associated Press.

PARIS, Wednesday, May 10.—A dispatch from Saigon to the Petit Journal says:

"Nebogatoff's squadron appeared at daybreak May 9 twenty miles off Cape St. James, preparing to ascend the river to Saigon, where the commander expected to find the necessary orders for effecting a junction with Rojestvensky and revictualling his fleet.

"He was hailed at sea by a scout belonging to the Russian Second Pacific Squadron, which communicated to him France's desire that the junction of the Russian squadrons should occur outside of Indo-Chinese waters.

"Nebogatoff then disappeared on the open sea, sailing toward the Second Squadron, which doubtless is waiting off the Annam coast."

NHA-TRANG, Indo-China, May 9.—Admiral Rojestvensky's squadron, which has been cruising for several days off Vanfong Bay, sailed this morning.

HONGKONG, May 9.—The German steamer Neumuhlen arrived here to-day from Colombo and reported having sighted forty-five vessels, of which twenty were warships, in the vicinity of Kamranh Bay on May 5.

PARIS, May 9.—Orders have been sent to the civil and naval authorities in French Indo-China not to permit the junction within French waters of the warships under Admirals Rojestvensky and Nebogatoff. Instructions have also been sent to Admiral de Jonquières to see that Rojestvensky fully observes the promise he has already given to leave French waters.

These orders resulted from the receipt of a detailed dispatch giving an account of De Jonquières's meetings with Rojestvensky. The dispatch said the Russian squadron made a four days' cruise on the high sea outside the three-mile limit and then returned last Saturday, anchoring at Kong-Hai Bay, southward of Hon-Kohe Bay, for the purpose of taking on provisions and fresh water.

When Admiral de Jonquières was informed of the Russians' return he proceeded to Kong-Hai, and requested Admiral Rojestvensky immediately to withdraw outside territorial waters. The Russian Admiral gave de Jonquières his word that he intended to leave his anchorage the following day, and take to the open sea. He also informed de Jonquières that in his communications with the land he had not violated any of the neutrality regulations, and that the stops of the Russian squadron along the Indo-China Coast were for the purpose of resting the crews.

The French Admiral then left Kong-Hai. He returned yesterday for the purpose of seeing whether Rojestvensky's promise to go to sea had been carried out, and found the Russian warships still at their anchorage, but preparing to depart. Rojestvensky assured him that the entire squadron would leave in the course of the night.

The newspapers do not show a menacing attitude. The Figaro says: "We desire peace and friendship with Japan."

The Journal remarks: "We meet Japan's complaints and menaces with the coolness and calmness of a tranquil conscience."

The Gaulois says: "If the British Government shares the view of the British press, France would like to know what the cordial understanding (between France and Great Britain) is worth."

RUSSIAN PAPER SARCASTIC.

Says Japan Frightens All the World But Rojestvensky.

ST. PETERSBURG, May 9.—The Japanese threats against France are not taken very seriously here. The Russian authorities continue to maintain that Admiral Rojestvensky has not overstepped the limits of neutrality.

All the newspapers discuss the subject, the Novoe Vremya sarcastically picturing Japan as the great dominating power of the world, laying down the law, issuing orders, and making of Rojestvensky a veritable outlaw, driven from place to place at Japan's bidding.

"And poor Rojestvensky," the paper continues, "wearied and not knowing where to go, remains where he is. But why does not the great Togo, who knows so well where his enemy is anchored, attack him and thus end all the complications? Japan has grown very pompous. Her frown inspires the world with awe, but it is passing strange that Rojestvensky has not been seized with the universal fright."

FRANCE EXPLAINS TO ENGLAND.

Rojestvensky Promised to Leave Hon-Kohe Bay May 3.

LONDON, Wednesday, May 10.—The situation in the Far East on account of the alleged violations of French neutrality by Admiral Rojestvensky and the possibility of Great Britain becoming involved formed the subject of a question to Premier Balfour in the House of Commons yesterday.

Mr. Balfour in reply read a statement supplied to the British Government by the French Ambassador, M. Cambon, as follows:

"As soon as the French Government was aware of Admiral Rojestvensky's presence at Kamranh Bay representations were sent to St. Petersburg, with the result that, under the orders of the Emperor himself, instructions were telegraphed to the Admiral desiring him to leave Kamranh Bay at once.

"The Russian squadron was subsequently reported to be at Hon-Kohe Bay, a few miles north of Kamranh Bay. Admiral de Jonquières, commanding the French station, was sent there to report. He found Admiral Rojestvensky's squadron there, though not inside French territorial waters.

"Thereupon the Governor of French Indo-China, who had received instructions to see that French neutrality was duly respected, sent the French Resident at Nha-Trang, the nearest point to that Admiral of Russia. The Admiral promised to do so May 3.

"As regards the reports that the Russian squadron received valuable assistance from the French authorities at Kamranh Bay, I am informed that there are only two Frenchmen there, neither of whom is an official, but they are holders of concessions from the French Government in that place."

Baron Hayashi, the Japanese Minister, said yesterday:

"Although the situation is very difficult there is no crisis at present. At the same time it would be unwise to allow popular feeling in Japan to be further inflamed, as it might become uncontrollable. This undoubtedly is fully appreciated in France, and there is every reason to suppose that France will see her way to relieve public anxiety and render the possibility of an extension of the sphere of the conflict out of the question."

JAPANESE ANGER NOT QUIETED.

Government Silent Regarding Action Taken in France.

TOKIO, May 9.—The feeling of resentment toward France for the assistance given to the Russian Second Pacific Squadron continues to run high, and is finding expression in a variety of ways.

The nearness of the Russian squadron and the nature of the preparations which Admiral Rojestvensky is known to have made in French waters seem to have suddenly convinced many people that it would have been impossible for Rojestvensky to come to the Far East without outside assistance, and this has given a sinister tone to the popular resentment.

In the crisis many eyes are turned toward Great Britain for assistance. It is argued that France rescued Rojestvensky from absolute failure to reach the China Sea, and that the final aid given to the Russians in Indo-China amounts to an act of belligerency, and there are many demands that Japan invoke the alliance with Great Britain.

Formerly a large section of the public was inclined to view with leniency France's acts of friendship for Russia on account of her delicate position as an ally and creditor. The suspicion that Rojestvensky was not a welcome guest at Kamranh Bay, and that he was presuming upon French hospitality, also tempered the feeling of resentment, but recent events are changing this feeling, and the national sentiment is uniting in unconditional insistence that France preserve neutrality.

The Japanese Government has not taken the people into its confidence. Since the Kamranh Bay incident nothing has been officially made known, except that the Government was making vigorous representations at Paris while proceeding carefully and cautiously, not desiring to resort to extreme measures while the hope of an adjustment existed.

GERMANS' CROCODILE TEARS.

Papers Condole with Britain Over Her Neutrality Dilemma.

BERLIN, May 9.—The German newspapers condole with Great Britain on the uncomfortable position, in which she has been placed by the actions of Admiral Rojestvensky.

It is, however, rather difficult to restrain the satisfaction felt in Germany over this check to the understanding between Great Britain and France, which has been the subject of much thought on the part of the Government here.

RUSSIANS MAY INVADE KOREA.

15,000 Men Said to be Massed on the Left Bank of the Tumen.

LONDON TIMES—NEW YORK TIMES.
Special Cables. Copyright, 1905.

TOKIO, May 9.—The Russians are apparently assembling a force for the purpose of invading Korea from the northeast as a means of defending Vladivostok and creating a diversion. It is reported that 15,000 men have been collected on the left bank of the Tumen River.

The movement is regarded lightly in Japan.

MOSCOW, May 9.—I hear on good authority that the army Red Cross hospitals will be moved to Chita, the evacuation of Harbin being regarded as probable.

THE PAWNBROKERS DINE.

And Are Praised—Three Cherries in Every Cocktail.

The eighth annual dinner of the Pawnbrokers' Association of the City of New York was held last night at the Savoy Hotel and, emblematically, each cocktail glass held three cherries neatly arranged in its bottom. At the speaker's table beside President B. Fox and Vice President John Anderson were several guests, among them Congressman Henry Goldfogle, Judge McCarthy of the City Court, Maurice Blumenthal, Abraham Levy, Henry Unger, and Daniel O'Reilly.

President Fox, the first speaker, extended a fervid welcome to all the members.

Henry W. McAleenan, who is seventy-seven years old, was cheered when he responded to the toast, "The Dean of the Profession."

Gen. James R. O'Beirne was next introduced. He began by declaring that he knew of no nobler profession than that of the pawnbroker, and no more "charming association" than that recruited from its ranks.

"You are a grand force for good," he said impressively.

It is your province to relieve the distressed. You are a quiet attestation of the trade and commerce of the United States."

"You are a fine body of men," said Mr. Levy, jocularly, when his time to speak came. "The greatest ever. Public benefactors and bearers of the burdens of the poor. You are not in business for the interest, are you?"

In a serious vein Mr. Levy then made a plea for the uplifting of the pawnbrokers by their own efforts.

"You are not Shylocks," he said, "but good citizens, doing a legitimate business under the protection of the law."

DINNER TO JAPANESE BANKER.

Mr. Takahashi, Who Floated War Loan, Honored by Countrymen.

In honor of K. Takahashi, Vice Governor of the Bank of Japan, who recently arrived from London with his suite, twenty Japanese merchants of New York gave a dinner last night at the Hotel Astor, Times Square. Mr. Takahashi supervised the flotation of the recent Japanese war loan. He was accompanied on his American visit by Y. Yamakawa, manager of the Yokohama Bank of London.

All the speeches were made in Japanese. According to members of the party there was no reference to the strained relations between France and Japan, the speakers devoting themselves to praise of America.

Mr. Takahashi expressed the gratitude of the Japanese people to the Americans who had subscribed to the war loan.

MASSACRES OF JEWS IN SOUTHERN RUSSIA

Report That Thirteen Have Been Killed at Melitopol.

MANY VICTIMS AT ZHITOMIR

Outbreak There Attributed to Articles in the New Paper of the Jew Baiter Kroushevan.

LONDON, Wednesday, May 10.—A dispatch to a news agency from Odessa says it is reported there that thirteen Jews have been killed in riots at Melitopol, in the Government of Taurida, South Russia.

ST. PETERSBURG, May 9.—The rumors of a massacre of Jews at Zhitomir, Government of Volhynia, Southwestern Russia, are confirmed.

A dispatch to the Novosti says the rioting began on Sunday and continued for forty-eight hours. Orthodox Christians fell upon the Jews in the streets. The Jews were armed and fought their assailants, many being killed or wounded on both sides.

Commenting upon this news, the Novosti remarks upon the coincidence that M. Kroushevan, (formerly editor of the Bessarabetz of Kishineff,) had hardly returned to Kishineff and started the publication of a new paper before Jewish massacres began in the neighborhood.

Private messages from Zhitomir attribute the attack upon the Jews to articles in M. Kroushevan's paper.

It is stated in private dispatches that twelve persons were killed and fifty were wounded.

On Sunday the Jews telegraphed to friends in St. Petersburg telling them to ask the authorities to take strong measures for their protection, and orders to that effect were sent. Nevertheless a renewal of the fighting to-day was expected.

HAY MAY VISIT CAPITALS.

Suggestions That He Meet von Buelow, Delcasse, and Lansdowne.

BAD NAUHEIM, Hesse, May 9.—Spencer F. Eddy, First Secretary of the American Embassy at St. Petersburg, arrived here to-day to see Secretary of State Hay.

Most of the American Ambassadors and Ministers in Europe have written to inquire about Mr. Hay's health and to invite him to their capitals. There is talk of Mr. Hay visiting Berlin, Paris, and London, and of his arranging to meet Chancellor von Buelow, Foreign Minister Delcassé, and Foreign Secretary Lansdowne before he returns to America in June.

So far as can be learned, nothing definite has been decided, and the suggestions remain only possibilities.

JAPANESE PRINCE IN ROME.

Arisugawa Cordially Welcomed by King Victor Emmanuel.

ROME, May 9.—Prince and Princess Arisugawa, the former a cousin of the Emperor of Japan, visited King Victor Emmanuel and Queen Helena at the Quirinal to-day, and were cordially entertained by the sovereigns for about an hour.

Prince Arisugawa recalled the fact that he and King Victor Emmanuel (then the Crown Prince) had met at the jubilee of Queen Victoria. The King invited Prince Arisugawa to visit the barracks with him to-morrow, and, with the Princess, to attend a family dinner in the evening at the Quirinal.

The Prince and Princess will leave Rome on May 13. They expressed their regret at not being able to meet the Queen Dowager, who is at present absent from Rome and who is held in high regard in Japan.

ARANSAS PASSENGERS HERE.

Larchmont Brings Captain, Crew, and Other Wreck Survivors to Port.

The Joy Line steamer Larchmont arrived yesterday morning with eighteen passengers of the Aransas, which was sunk of Pollock Rip Lightship Sunday. The Larchmont also brought Capt. Root, First Mate Crocker, and twenty-six of the crew of the Aransas.

The passengers again praised Capt. Root and Mate Crocker for their bravery and coolness. They said their safety was wholly due to the work of the officers and crew. Capt. Root said that the accident was quickly over, the Aransas sinking within fifteen minutes after the collision with the scow Glendower.

Tugboats are to be sent from Boston to examine the Aransas. The value of the cargo was estimated yesterday at $175,000, which brings the gross loss to about $300,000.

ROME, May 9.—In view of the situation in Crete the Italian battleship Sardegna and the cruiser Giovanni Bausan have been ordered to go to Sude Bay, in the northern part of that island.

Herrera, Alleged Plotter, Freed.

MADRID, May 9.—Sarrion de Herrera, who was arraigned in court here on May 6 on the charge of conspiracy against the Government of Brazil, has been liberated, the Magistrate having found nothing to justify his detention.

VOTE OF THIRTY-SEVEN MADE 4,400 STRIKE

Witness Tells How Chicago Teamsters Obeyed Mandate.

WOMEN LED IN MOB ATTACK

Blocked Car Traffic for an Hour with Bombardment of Non-Union Driver—Tie-Up Broken.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, May 9.—The votes of but thirty-seven men brought about the strike which has resulted in the trucking tie-up and rioting under which Chicago has suffered for weeks. This fact was brought out to-day before Master in Chancery Sherman in taking evidence relative to the injunctions granted temporarily by the United States Circuit Court, which the Employers' Association and seven express companies seek to have made permanent. These thirty-seven men were all, out of an organization of 700 teamsters, who took enough interest in the strike proposal to respond to notice of a meeting and vote on it.

E. B. Eddy, General Agent of the United States Express Company, testified:

"After the commencement of the strike against the express companies I held a meeting with Cornelius P. Shea, President of the Teamsters' Union; J. B. Barry, and Hugh McGee of the union. Mr. Barry suggested that, inasmuch as only 37 men had voted for a strike out of the 700 involved, it would we well to call another meeting and have a referendum vote on the proposition. Shea said that notices were sent to all members, and, inasmuch as they had failed, with the exception of thirty-seven, to attend the meeting, the vote of the majority of those present was sufficient and the leaders must be guided by that vote.

"Some of our drivers assured me that they were willing to work, but would have their heads knocked off if they did so. The only union men who are working for us are two who drive wagons containing the Government money. They work by permission of the union. I saw the cards signed by the union, and I heard that the unions feared Federal troops if the Government was interfered with."

Because the Crane Company discharged a man for refusing to make a delivery, seventy drivers will strike to-morrow. About sixty drivers hauling coal for the Wenig Teaming Company struck to-day, making the total strikers 4,418. The Wenig Company was engaged chiefly in delivering flour for milling companies.

The Mayor's strike committee held a secret meeting, but, it is said, arrived at no definite result.

The large department stores and express companies to-day resumed business on almost a normal basis. They sent their wagons to the extreme parts of the city. Sixteen hundred teams were at work.

Although surrounded by six guards, a non-union teamster was knocked off his wagon to-day and severely injured by strike sympathizers.

Women strike sympathizers started a riot at Lake and Clark Streets, bombarding a non-union driver with oranges and other fruit from an elevated railroad station. Many car windows were smashed by harder missiles. Street cars were held up for nearly an hour. Three onslaughts of police were necessary to disperse the mob.

Union labor leaders appeared less enthusiastic to-day about bringing their strike troubles to the attention of President Roosevelt to-morrow. They have named C. P. Shea, Charles Dold, John J. Fitzpatrick, T. A. Rickert, J. F. O'Neill, and T. P. Quinn as the committee.

The withdrawal of the $1,500,000 deposits by labor unions in the "unfair" banks will begin to-morrow. In addition to the large sums deposited by the labor organizations, there are thousands of dollars deposited by individual members.

"We shall send out a letter to-morrow," declared John C. Harding, head of the Labor Committee, "to every banking institution in Chicago, asking one question: 'Did you participate in the $50,000 contribution to the employers?'"

"We cannot tell how we will answer the committee's question until it has been asked," said one banker to-night.

A GIFT SPLITS A UNION.

Electrical Workers at Factional Odds Over Purcell's Diamond Pin.

A lively time is expected to-night at the meeting of the New York Electrical Workers' Union, which is split in two factions, each of which has invoked the Supreme Court to oust the other.

The faction led by Charles A. Krause, the Treasurer, applied to Justice O'Gorman, in the Supreme Court, yesterday, to continue an injunction restraining the President, John F. Hogan, from drawing any of the union's funds from the Corn Exchange Bank and from interfering with the desks of the officers. Hogan, who represents the faction which now seems to be in control, will insist upon presiding at to-night's meeting.

According to Krause, the trouble began when President Hogan had a resolution adopted to give a present to Richard Purcell. The resolution is said to have authorized Hogan to expend $150 for a present for Purcell, but that he ordered a diamond pin worth $1,195 from Tiffany, charging it up to the union. Krause alleges that Hogan was suspended for this.

Hogan, in answering these charges, declared that he was ready to disprove all of the charges and that the dispute was simply as to who were the properly elected officers of the union.

STAY FOR MRS. VALENTINA.

New Jersey Woman's Case Goes to United States Supreme Court.

Special to The New York Times.

TRENTON, N. J., May 9.—Mrs. Anna Valentina of Hackensack, who was under sentence of death for killing Rosa Salza, will not be hanged Friday. James Trimble, her counsel, went before United States Judge Lanning to-day to argue a writ of habeas corpus on the ground that Mrs. Valentina had not been given the constitutional rights of a fair trial guaranteed to residents of this country under the treaty with Italy.

Judge Lanning denied the writ, but allowed an appeal to the United States Supreme Court. This acts as a stay until the error of Judge Lanning in refusing to grant the writ of habeas corpus is argued at Washington.

Consul General Tosti, representative of the Italian Government in this city, said yesterday that under instructions received from the Italian Government, he would stand by Mrs. Valentina and provide her with such funds and counsel as were necessary. He intimated that his Government had taken a very serious view of the case, and that it bordered on international complications, because it was believed the woman had not had a fair trial.

CAR UPSETS A CARRIAGE.

Father and Two Sons Have Lucky Escape in a Broadway Spill.

In Times Square late yesterday afternoon a south-bound Broadway car overturned a carriage containing John McGuire of 329 East Eighty-fifth Street and his two sons. All were thrown out, but received no injuries.

Mr. McGuire was attempting to cross the tracks when the car struck the carriage and capsized it. The horse started to run away, but was caught by a man who was passing. Mr. McGuire and his two sons jumped up, brushed themselves off, righted the carriage, and drove away.

DIVORCED 43 YEARS AGO.

Principal Du Bois's Secret Just Learned by Daughter, Suing.

Mrs. Ivy Blanche McKee, who started an action in the Supreme Court attacking the validity of the will of her father, Alpheus Du Bois, has just learned that her mother was divorced from her father forty-three years ago, when Mrs. McKee was four years old. This fact was disclosed yesterday in argument in the Supreme Court on a motion made by counsel for Mrs. McKee, who asked leave to amend the complaint by setting up the fact of the divorce.

Alpheus Du Bois was Principal of Grammar School 36 in this city. He died on Dec. 18, 1903, leaving an estate valued at more than $500,000. He was seventy-seven years old. By his will, which was probated a year ago, he bequeathed $18,000 to certain school teachers, gave $10,000 to his daughter, and left the balance of his estate to his two sisters, Mary D. Jones and Caroline D. Seaman. Mrs. Du Bois was not mentioned in the will.

For the purpose of asking her mother to come here to be a witness in the trial of her suit, Mrs. McKee went to Kingston with her attorney four days ago. Mrs. Du Bois, who resides in Kingston, was questioned as to what evidence she might supply in the case. Then, much to the surprise of her daughter and the lawyer, Mrs. Du Bois said that her husband had divorced her forty-three years ago, securing from her an absolute divorce in the courts of Iowa. The fact, she said, had been kept a secret here.

After hearing the story, Justice O'Gorman denied the motion to amend the complaint, but gave Mrs. McKee's attorney permission to renew the motion when the case is called for trial.

RAILWAY RATES IN ENGLAND.

British Expert Says Public Suffers by Legislative Interference.

WASHINGTON, May 9.—The Senate Committee on Inter-State Commerce to-day heard the testimony of a number of witnesses on the subject of railway rate legislation, and later, at an executive meeting, decided to expedite the hearings so as to adjourn if possible by May 22.

W. M. Ackworth of England, a delegate to the International Railway Congress, outlined railway conditions in England and the laws of the British Government on the subject. It was his opinion that the interference of Parliament and courts in the control of rates had been a loss to the British public. The railways there, he said, did not reduce rates now because under the present law they might not be able to put them up again.

KILLED BY STRAY SHOT.

Goldstein Victim of Quarrel Over Payment for Beer.

Abraham Goldstein of 14 Monroe Street was shot and almost instantly killed last night outside a saloon at First Avenue and Twelfth Street.

Frank Maurer of 281 First Avenue refused to pay for two glasses of beer supposed to have been ordered by him and was pursued by the bartender with a club to the sidewalk. A shot was fired, and Goldstein fell, mortally wounded.

Maurer ran, but was found in a vacant house in Avenue A. He refused to admit that he had shot Goldstein.

Tail-Enders Surprise Champions and Win by a Score of 8 to 7.

With but five games won and thirteen lost against fourteen victories and four defeats for the New Yorks, the St. Louis team made its appearance at the Polo Grounds yesterday and won a surprising victory by a score of eight to seven. This result was due to a combination of good, strong batting and excellent fielding when most needed, although in the latter respect the visitors made a number of unpardonable blunders. The most surprising feature of the game was the manner in which McGinnity's delivery was batted all over the field. The batting record of St. Louis was propably the greatest ever achieved by any team against the "Iron Man," the Western team being credited with seventeen hits and a total of twenty-four bases. This included two home runs and a double. McGinnity requested to be retired in the sixth inning after a home run and two singles had been made by St. Louis, but Manager McGraw evidently thought that the batting streak was only spasmodic and kept his premier pitcher at work.

He pitched in something like his old-time form in the seventh and eighth innings, and with the score six to four in favor of the New Yorks at the end of the eighth inning, he began the last inning of the visitors by seeing Pitcher Thielman retired on a fly ball to right field. But the next six men hit him safely and four earned runs were the result. This placed the visitors two runs ahead, and although Browne batted to the right field "bleachers" for three bases and scored on McGann's out from short stop to first base, Bresnahan ended the game by hitting up a fly to centre field.

Outside of the batting the brilliant display of Shannon at left field and the work of the two short stops, Dahlen and Brain, were prominent features of the game. Only two mistakes were committed by New York, Browne missing a fly ball and Gilbert failing to hold a throw by McGinnity.

Five innings it was anybody's game, and then it began to dawn upon the local team's "rooters" that the St. Louis team was a dangerous proposition and looked to have equal chances with the local men of winning. After the first two men had struck out Smoot placed a slow ball along the third base line and reached first in safety. On Brain's long fly to right field, which Browne dropped, he tallied. Browne scored for the New Yorks on a base hit to right field and Burke's wretched throw to first of Bresnahan's hit. Clarke's home run hit to centre field gave the visitors another run in the third inning, and Thielman's weak but safe hit to third base, Gilbert's failure to hold McGinnity's throw, and Shannon's double added another run in the fifth inning. The score then was three to two in St. Louis's favor, but on three singles and Brain's fumble of Thielman's throw the New Yorks scored two runs, making the total a tie.

In the sixth inning, after Bresnahan had disposed of Beckley by a pretty catch of a foul fly, Dunleavy hit to the extreme centre field for a home run. This was followed by two singles, and it was at this time that McGinnity asked to be relieved. The inning ended, however, without further scoring. In the seventh inning matters looked brighter for the New Yorks, for they made three runs and assumed a lead on three hits, two bad throws of Thielman and Burke, and Bresnahan's out. Neither team tallied in the eighth, but in the ninth the visitors placed victory beyond dispute.

CINCINNATI, 6; BROOKLYN, 4.

After having the game with Cincinnati well in hand at the end of the seventh inning at Washington Park yesterday, McIntyre, who had been pitching very well, seemed to go all to pieces, for in the eighth inning the visitors batted out three runs, and with the aid of Babb's error and more good hitting, they added another run in the ninth, tying the score. The playing was rather sharp for the next three innings, but in the thirteenth the Cincinnatis scored two runs off Jones's pitching, and finally won by 6 to 4.

The fielding of the Brooklyns was loose, Batch playing very poorly at third base, while Babb's errors at first were costly. After the second inning, in which Hanlon's men tallied four runs, they were wholly at the mercy of Walker and Chech.

Greater New Yorks Beaten in First Inning in Last Boston Game.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, Mass., May 9.—The Bostons wound up their series with the Greater New Yorks this afternoon with a victory, the score being 5 to 2. Powell and Tannehill were the opposing pitchers, and the game was lost by the visitors in the first inning, when Burkett, Parent, Stahl, and Collins hit safely, and after Freeman had sacrificed Grimshaw cleared the bases and three runs were marked up to Boston's credit.

In the second inning Williams scored for New York on a double, a fielder's choice, and Chase's hit to centre field, but in the same inning the Bostons jumped on Powell for two more runs. Criger singled, and took second on a passed ball. Tannehill, Burkett, and Parent went to first on called balls in succession, forcing Criger home. Stahl popped up an easy fly to Conroy. Collins sent a long fly to Fultz, scoring Tannehill, but Freeman forced Parent at second, Conroy to Williams.

Hogg relieved Powell after this, and the Bostons could get no more runs. In New York's fifth inning Yeager tripled, and scored on Kleinow's hard hit to Ferris.

Griffith was put off the field in the third inning for talking back to the umpire. The score:

Chicago scored its winning run in the ninth inning, when Donahue failed to cover first base on a bunt. Bemis's wild throw allowed Davis to score from first in the sixth. Score:

WASHINGTON, 3; PHILADELPHIA, 1

WASHINGTON, May 9.—Philadelphia's costly errors when men were on bases and their inability to hit Townsend at critical moments to-day decided the final game of the series in Washington's favor and placed the local team at the head of the American League again.

Cassidy stopped a line drive in the last inning and recovered in time to retire the runner, making one of the prettiest plays of the season. "Schreck's" finger was injured by a pitched ball in the second inning, and he was forced to retire. Miss Alice Roosevelt was an interested spectator. Score:

Jersey City Plays All Around Baltimore and Takes Game, 15 to 7.

Jersey City played all around Baltimore yesterday and won an uninteresting game by a score of 15 to 7. It was the fourth contest on the home grounds, and by winning the local team took three games of the series. Baltimore played a slovenly game in the field, and the seven errors that were piled up proved costly in each instance. Adkins, who was in the box for the visitors, was out of sorts, and the heavy hitters of the local team landed on him with telling effect. In the fifth inning Pfanmiller, who did the pitching for Jersey City, was relieved by Mack, a new "find" by Manager Murray. He showed to good advantage. The score:

PROVIDENCE, R. I., May 9.—Newark forfeited to the Providence team this afternoon, when Capt. Gatins refused to leave the field when ordered to do so by Umpire Conway. TORONTO, Ontario, May 9.—The eleventh inning was required this afternoon to decide the winner of Rochester-Toronto baseball game, but Toft's two-bagger put the Torontos one run in the lead, making the score 5 to 4. McGee, who was looked upon to do great things for Toronto, proved rather a disappointment as a pitcher. The Rochesters hit him hard. All of Toronto's runs were made on errors. Score by innings:

GANZEL COMING BACK.

Will Play with Local Americans Again —Chase or Anderson to Go.

Special to The New York Times.

WHEELING, West Va., May 9.—John Ganzel, the non-playing manager of the Grand Rapids Club of the Central League, and principal owner as well, will soon be seen again in the uniform of the New York American League Club, under which he is held by the reserve clause of his 1904 contract, and by reason of which he has been unable to play with Grand Rapids. Manager Griffith of New York has declined all propositions looking to the granting of Ganzel's release.

In a talk with Manager Schriver of the Wheeling Club John Ganzel said that he would probably leave for New York next Saturday and have a talk with Frank Farrell, owner of the Greater New Yorks. He further said that Griffith had offered to release either Chase or Anderson to Grand Rapids, and that the deal for one or the other of the two players would doubtless be made.

Ganzel would have preferred to manage his Grand Rapids team and play first base, but since Manager Griffith has refused to hand out his release he has come to the conclusion that the return to his New York allegiance is inevitable.

PELL'S SMASHING TENNIS.

He Won Doubles with Hoffman on the St. Nicholas Courts.

Theodore Roosevelt Pell and Ellis C. Hoffman won the final match of the men's lawn tennis doubles yesterday on the canvas-covered court of the St. Nicholas Rink. The opposing team was composed of Cyril Hatch and Philip Livermore, who were defeated in straight sets by the score of 6—1 and 7—5. In the opening set Pell and his partner had the playing all their own way.

Hatch and Livermore, who had been hopelessly out of the contest in the first set, braced in amazing style in the second set and gave Pell and Hoffman several anxious moments before the match was finally won. Hatch was excellent at his volleying tactics and often passed both Pell and Hoffman as they came up from their base line to the net. Livermore's best racquet play was from deep in his court, from which he drove for passes along the side alleys with great skill. The fiercely fought rallies were the feature of the set, and, although Hatch and Livermore brought the games to deuce at 5—all, they were not so aggressive as "Teddy" Pell.

Mrs. Barger-Wallach, who has so ably managed the indoor tournaments, announced yesterday that again the players who are spoken of for the international lawn tennis team of challengers would play on the St. Nicholas courts. Holcombe Ward, the National champion, and Malcolm D. Whitman, the ex-champion, will meet in singles on Thursday, and the champion double pair, Holcombe Ward and Beals C. Wright, will meet Whitman and Theodore Roosevelt Pell in doubles Friday afternoon of this week.

Jersey City Plays All Around Baltimore and Takes Game, 15 to 7.

Jersey City played all around Baltimore yesterday and won an uninteresting game by a score of 15 to 7. It was the fourth contest on the home grounds, and by winning the local team took three games of the series. Baltimore played a slovenly game in the field, and the seven errors that were piled up proved costly in each instance. Adkins, who was in the box for the visitors, was out of sorts, and the heavy hitters of the local team landed on him with telling effect. In the fifth inning Pfanmiller, who did the pitching for Jersey City, was relieved by Mack, a new "find" by Manager Murray. He showed to good advantage. The score:

WARD LOSES TO WHITMAN.

National Tennis Champion Beaten in Straight Sets at Plainfield Club.

Holcombe Ward, the National singles champion, was defeated yesterday by the ex-champion, Malcolm D. Whitman, on the courts of the Plainfield Country Club, Plainfield, N. J. Whitman displayed his old-time game against Ward and won in straight sets by the score of 11—9, 7—5, and 6—3. It was the long reach of the ex-champion that bothered Ward and assisted in his defeat. He was unable to get in those nippy little cross shots that have proved to be point earners for him, as Whitman covered his court ably and got up close so as to prevent play of this description.

The strong breeze that blew across the court handicapped both of the men in the drives for placement. Whitman's accuracy of aim stood him in good stead, however, and he accomplished such good work in this direction that it helped him in no small measure in winning the match. Generally speaking, Ward was a trifle below his usual form.

MAY 1905

THE MAYOR'S TERM.

In due course a hearing will be announced by Mayor McCLELLAN upon the bill extending to four years the term of the office which he has filled with such notable credit since January, 1904. As it is a measure relating solely to this city, it must be submitted to our municipal executive, whose duty it will be to approve or disapprove it according to his view of the interests of the city and the opinion of the people of the city. On the face of the matter, it may seem a little incongruous to ask a man in high public office to pass upon a bill which apparently so directly and substantially affects his own political fortunes. But it ought to be quite possible for such an officer to discharge this important function with impartiality and without bias from his own sense of his own personal relation to its operation.

In the first place it must be remembered that the bill does not affect the term of Mayor alone; it extends to four years the terms of the Controller, the President of the Board of Aldermen, and the Borough Presidents also. In other words, it gives a reasonable official life to the members of the Board of Estimate and Apportionment, who, under the legislation relating to franchises, are now in effect the representative body among the city authorities. It is of extreme value to have this body enjoy their enlarged powers for a reasonable period. If for no other reason this would be true because of the comprehensive system of rapid transit franchises which will have to be passed upon during the next few years. It would be an intolerable nuisance to have this work treated haphazard and in fragments, as it easily might be with a continuance of the two-year term. In the next place, in extending the term of the Mayor to four years, the terms of all the heads of departments are involved. It happens indeed that there is a fair chance that Mayor McCLELLAN may be re-elected, and that we can have for the present the advantage of four years of his administration, but we imagine that he would be the last one to deny that this advantage would immensely be increased if he were to be elected for a second term of four years instead of two. His power to do the best for the city would be more than doubled were he to remain for six years in all, under the conditions that now present themselves. Regarding the matter, therefore, with reference to the benefit only that would accrue to the city from the stability of administration in the offices of the members of the Board of Estimate and Apportionment and in those of the heads of departments, the argument for the bill is overwhelming.

If, again, we regard the matter from the point of view of the people of the city, there is no room for doubt. A four-year term was a feature of the charter of the consolidated city, and it was an essential element in the scheme of consolidation for which the people of the then separated cities voted. It was presented at the time as one of the substantial improvements involved in consolidation. It is unnecessary now to inquire as to the reasons for amending the charter by shortening the term. Suffice it to say that it certainly was not done in obedience to any popular demand, and that whatever advantage there was supposed to be in it was the advantage of the minority party in the city. We have not a particle of doubt that if the question could now be referred to a popular vote, in the light of actual experience and of reason, the bill would be practically unanimously approved.

The argument for the bill is so plain and strong that to urge it at the present moment seems a little like what our French friends would call "beating in an open door." We bring the question up in this form, on the eve of the hearing before the Mayor, because there have been reports circulated that it is his intention to disapprove the bill. And these reports even go so far as to intimate that a term of four years more would not so well suit the personal plans and ambitions of Mr. McCLELLAN as one of two years. We shall not insult the Mayor by the supposition that he will be influenced in this matter—really the most important that has come before him—by any such considerations. But he has a perfect right to regard the measure with reference to the effect upon his power and opportunity to render honorable and permanently valuable service to his city. Beyond all dispute, the effect in that direction would be very great. We have already pointed out what it would be. With this bill enacted into law—to put the thing plainly—Mr. McCLELLAN could have almost certainly four years more in office with substantial freedom from all partisan hindrances and the chance to give the city the very best administration reasonably to be expected, which is to say an administration much better than it has ever had. The welfare of an imperial city of four millions of people would lie in his unfettered hands. To take in charge that tremendous trust, to administer it faithfully, independently, with care and energy and courage, that is an ambition he may well feel at liberty to entertain. Nor need he be ashamed to reflect for what further trust its successful discharge would prove him to be fitted.

IF HE COULD HAVE HIS WAY.

Returning from his bear-hunt President ROOSEVELT takes the occasion of a Chamber of Commerce dinner in Denver to communicate to the American people views and opinions upon public affairs that would cause multitudes of his fellow-citizens to take to the woods he has just left, if they felt that he had the power to put in practice the policies he preaches. That the Presidential mind has undergone no essential change, and the theories that so profusely germinate therein no modification during these few weeks of retirement from the distractions of civilization, will be apparent to anybody who reads this extract from Mr. ROOSEVELT'S Denver speech:

> I want to say a word as to a Governmental policy in which I feel that this whole country ought to take a great interest and which is itself but part of a general policy into which I think our Government must go. I speak of the policy of extending the power of the Inter-State Commerce Commission and of giving them particularly the power to fix rates and to have the rates that they fix go into effect practically at once. As I say, that represents in my mind part of what should be the general policy of this country, the policy of giving not to the State but to the National Government an increased supervisory and regulatory power over corporations. [Applause.]

These observations are really of startling import, and but for two reasons they would create a state bordering on public alarm. One reason is that we are now well used to these utterances from the President. The other reason is the United States Senate, which the business interests of the country have come to believe stands between them and the application of the dangerous principles and policies to which the President is committed. If this were new matter that the President proclaimed on Monday evening; if the Senate were made up of men known to be of his mind or disposed to yield to him in all things; that is to say, if Mr. ROOSEVELT had the power to embody in a statute his word and his will, values would doubtless go tumbling and there would come upon us a time of panic and business prostration far surpassing in its painful and destructive consequences the year 1893.

The capital invested in railroads in this country, according to Poor's Manual for 1904, amounted to $6,355,207,335 in capital stock and $6,722,216,517 in bonds. The capital invested in manufactures amounted in 1900 to $9,831,486,500. Here is an aggregate of corporation capital reaching the vast sum of $22,908,910,352. The President of the United States contends that the ultimate control over these billions of capital, and most vital details of the management of the corporations in the stock or bonds in which it is invested, shall be taken away from the owners of the shares and bonds and committed into the hands of Federal Commissioners at Washington, appointed by himself. Of the railroads he would take immediate control. The control of other corporations would come later, for the fixing of railroad rates is but part of a general policy "of giving not to the State but to the National Government an increased supervisory and regulatory power over corporations."

What this means the President told us in December last by the hand of his Commissioner of Corporations, Mr. GARFIELD. In a report treating of some of the gravest and profoundest problems of Constitutional law, with an airy confidence that seemed astonishing in a lawyer so young and unpracticed, Mr. GARFIELD, after declaring that the system of State-created corporations under which we got along reasonably well for a century and a quarter "is thoroughly vicious," recommended a substitute system upon which, it appeared, he and the President had agreed. This was a system of Federal franchises or licenses for all corporations engaging, or intending to engage, in inter-State commerce. The scope of his plan was indicated by Mr. GARFIELD when he said that "inasmuch as practically all of the corporations of the present time are engaged in inter-State commerce," &c. Commissioner GARFIELD and the President manifestly aim at the control of all the corporations in the country. That is what it would come to, in spite of the decision in the Knight case that manufacturing is not inter-State commerce. We are within the mark, therefore, in saying that the carrying into effect of the President's recommendations would put into the hands of a few Federal commissioners in Washington the ultimate and practically absolute control over twenty-two billions of the invested capital of the American people.

If so great a change in our economic policy were really at hand, business men would inquire first of all who was to wield this autocratic power over their fortunes. They might be apprehensive enough, even were they confident that Mr. ROOSEVELT would continue to be President for an indefinite number of years. But what would happen if there were reason to fear that not Mr. ROOSEVELT, but let us say Mr. BRYAN, would come to the Presidency? That is quite among the possibilities. The President warned his Denver audience that the Federal power must accept this control over corporations with the "firm determination" not only to do justice to the people but to do justice to the corporations. He is accustomed to soften his proclamations of subversive and revolutionary ideas by some such counterpoise of cautious counsel. But if a thoroughgoing demagogue should get into the White House, which we say again is by no means an impossibility, what would he care for the railroads or for justice to any soulless corporation? It is just there that the trouble comes in.

In short, Mr. ROOSEVELT'S theories if put in practice would, in addition to other disasters, tie the entire business of the country up to its politics. Just as whenever tariff revision is talked of the highly protected industries quake with the fear that their bounty may be taken away, so every corporation in the country, as often as a Presidential election recurred, would be smitten with alarm, stagnation, and practical arrest of business until its fate were determined one way or the other by the voting. Of course business could not be carried on under such a Government system. If such a change impended the owners of corporate securities would make all haste to put their money into some form of property not subject to such perils, and as they would all want to sell their shares and bonds at once Wall Street for a short time would be a scene of quite unprecedented activity and excitement, to be followed by the silence of death.

Translated into practical effect this is what the President's policy of transferring from the States to the Federal Government the power of control over all corporations really means. He hopes to see his ideas enacted into a statute at the next session. There is the Senate, however. Probably in the whole course of its existence that body never had so many friends as at the present time.

THE ART OF PACKING.

How much will a dress suit case hold? For the average man it can be made to hold a dress suit, a clean shirt, a collar, cuffs, an extra pair of stockings, a restricted kit of toilet conveniences, a few cigarettes, and a box of matches. To get all this in often requires some ingenuity. For a woman, and especially for one with the packing instinct highly developed, it can be made to hold an entire wardrobe. A young woman who lost a dress suit case through the carelessness of an expressman sued to recover its value, and proved to the satisfaction of the court that it contained:

> One foulard silk dress, one pongee shirtwaist suit, one silk gingham shirtwaist suit, one brown lawn dress, two white Persian lawn waists, one white mull evening dress, one black silk coat, three-quarter length; one white silk knitted shawl, one white lawn dress skirt, one fancy lawn apron, one white dimity tea jacket, one white madras shirtwaist, one brown linen shirtwaist, one white pique shirtwaist, one madras Gibson shirtwaist, four white muslin petticoats, four corset covers, three pairs muslin drawers, four silk net vests, three cotton net vests, one lawn Empire wrapper, three muslin nightdresses, eight pairs black lisle thread hose, one corset waist, one ebony mirror with silver trimmings, one gold hat brush, one silver nail brush, one silver tooth brush, two and a half yards black and blue satin ribbon, four inches wide; one dozen linen hand-made lace-trimmed handkerchiefs, three pairs kid gloves, one pair long white silk mitts, one gold locket and chain, one gold brooch set with turquois and diamonds, one dozen fancy collars and stocks, two point lace ties, one point lace handkerchief.

We venture the assumption that it was not quite as full as it could have been had the owner intended a longer journey. In the presence of such phenomena as are often observed in the packing of trunks and handbags, in which miscellaneous articles occupying two and a half cubic feet of space are made to accommodate themselves in one cubic foot of capacity, the most remarkable attainments of man sink into insignificance. It is perhaps true that among professional packers men excel women, but not in making two things occupy the space of one. The average man whose wife packs his trunk at the beginning of his journey thinks it easy enough and is probably impatient when what he lays in is taken out again to be placed more wisely; but when he has to repack it for the return journey, and finds that however vigorously he jumps on the pile of material it will not compress sufficiently to permit him so to depress the lid that he may lock it, he discovers that the art of packing is a peculiarly feminine accomplishment, and that a man could no more become an expert at it than he could at singing soprano. The wise man when he contemplates a journey lets his wife pack and then takes her along to repack. If not he will need a dry goods case to hold the overflow when he turns homeward.

STRIKE EXPENSES.

Some computations lately made to show the cost to the City of Chicago of one week of the recent strike of the teamsters give results which are sufficiently startling to challenge attention, although the totals undoubtedly fall far below the truth. Some of the items are as follows: Loss of wages by strikers for one week, $51,000; assessments paid by other unions to sustain strikers, $27,000; general expenses of this city for extra police protection, $8,750; costs to the county, $3,000; loss of business by concerns depending upon cartage, $1,510,000; losses of the railroads, $350,000; losses of the express companies, $250,000; losses of hotels and theatres, $13,000. The sum of these items is $2,245,000. Probably half as much more might be added for losses and expenses of which it is impossible to take any account. In addition 3 persons were killed, 50 dangerously wounded, and more than 300 injured by violence. The weakening of the obligations of citizenship, the encouragement given to general lawlessness, the demoralization of large classes of the community by idleness and enlistment in organized crime against the rights of other classes, are together worth a great deal more in the tale of damage to Chicago than the items enumerated.

Lasting class hatreds have been engendered by it, largely because the motives of those who opposed the methods of the strike were misunderstood. For example, the contribution of $50,000 by the Associated Banks of Chicago to the fund of the Employers' Association has created the bitterest resentment among the unions of Chicago, and some of them have already taken action looking to the withdrawal from these banks of deposits in any way controlled by labor. It would probably be impossible to make these people understand that not one dollar of this money was contributed to enable the employers to defeat the unions or to resist their demands for the advantages sought by the union teamsters. It was given because it could be employed by the Employers' Association to the best advantage in vindicating the supremacy of law. Had the strike been conducted peaceably and the unions done what was possible for them to do to suppress violence and hand over those committing outrages against persons or property to the officers of the law, the banks would have done nothing to help the employers.

From whatever point of view regarded it is impossible to estimate the amount of injury which the City of Chicago has suffered from this strike, which has put so large an element of its population in antagonism to the law. The cost of restoring civic order and establishing civic peace on a stable basis is beyond computation. In one way or another the burden of this cost will ultimately fall largely upon organized labor.

TOPICS OF THE TIMES.

Settling a Case Too Soon.

Rashly accepting as conclusive the explanation of the Oteri's Captain in regard to his refusal of assistance to the dispatch boat Syiph, more widely but less correctly known as "the President's yacht," The American Syren talks loftily about newspaper attempts to make a sensation out of the incident. "Another light," according to The Syren, has been thrown on it by Capt. HATVILLE'S story of what he did and why—a light showing that "the officers of the Syiph overestimated their danger." Of course, it is The Syren's business to put in a good word for the merchant marine and merchant Captains when it can, but this is just a little too impudent and outrageous to be patiently endured. The facts of the case, as now developed, are that the commander of the Oteri, coming along up the coast with a perishable cargo and apparently in a temper already somewhat decomposed, sighted the Syiph, at best not much of a heavy-weather boat, lying unmanageable in a big storm. Passing close beside her, he was told that her condition was very serious and was asked to tow her into port. Viewing the situation from his own bridge, he decided that the officers on the Syiph were unduly alarmed and that they were not, as they thought, in any immediate danger. Then, aided by a wonderfully convenient accident to his engine-room telegraph, which prevented him from bringing his own boat about or stopping her, he went his way, leaving the job of towing the Syiph into port to be performed next day by another Captain, with a different view of the perils of the sea, or, rather, by one more inclined to believe that the naval man who requests assistance really stands in some need of it. Unfortunately for The Syren's theory that the Oteri was all right and the Syiph all wrong, the owners of the former vessel, having now heard both sides of the story, have suspended Capt. HATVILLE from his command, awaiting a final determination of his fate, and, for the present at least, he can truly say, as he is said to have remarked to Lieut. EVANS, that he is "no d——d towboat." If he had been one on a proper occasion his status would now be more enjoyable and his reputation, among seamen and landsmen alike, considerably more enviable. His cool assumption that the men on the Syiph knew neither their trade nor the extent of their peril supplies several rather strong indications that Capt. HATVILLE will profit from a somewhat prolonged retirement from a position where the making of such assumptions are apt to have consequences of the gravest sort.

A Name Likely to Stick.

It was almost if not quite fiendish ingenuity that chose just this week for calling Admiral ROJESTVENSKY "the hero of the Dogger Bank." He is now on what seems to be about the last of his many eyes of engaging in desperate conflict with the silent and invisible Togo, and to have this cruelly reminiscent name fastened on him when his mind was already beginning to be distracted by a doubt as to the boundlessness of French affection was really too much. The Admiral has never claimed any particular recognition for what he did when the Gamecock fleet attacked his ships, and anyway, that was long ago, and many things have happened since. He might modestly say that if he is as yet the hero of anything it is of the three-mile limit and of the prolonged delay within the same. The Dogger Bank episode did not count, but the judicious use of hesitating welcomes in alien territorial waters is a true title to fame, or will be if it creates complications so large that an actual conflict with the too self-confident warships of Japan would become hardly worth while and its ultimate avoidance excusable. With France at last issuing orders that somebody will have to obey, Admiral ROJESTVENSKY may well complain that to rake up the forgotten past was inconsiderate. The word is strong, but the moment is one that justifies it.

DEFENDS NIAGARA SCHEME.

No Peril to Falls, Says One Who Lived Near Them.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I am a reader of your paper and have noticed quite a number of letters from people who inveigh against the Ontario Power Canal scheme because of its liability to perceptibly lessen the waters that go over the Falls of Niagara and so tend to destroy this sublime spectacle. If this scheme is unworthy let it be killed, but do not let it be destroyed by a sentimental lie.

The Niagara River just above the Falls is as wide as the Hudson opposite New York, if not wider. It is not so deep possibly, but the current is very swift—so swift no boat could get to either shore from the centre of the stream a mile above the precipice. It is safe to say the volume of water passing over the Falls is greater than that passing New York in the Hudson at ebb tide. Now, if any one can believe that the Hudson River would be seriously damaged in volume of flow by deflecting therefrom a stream of about the width of a ferry slip with a three mile per hour current, then I am prepared to admit the Niagara River in danger, but not otherwise.

ROJESTVENSKY'S CHANCES.

Is He Driving Sheep or Leading a Charge of Bison?

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I see that you have a leading article this morning discussing the fighting efficiency of Rojestvensky's fleet. It has struck me for some time that the possibilities of that fleet are being vastly underrated. For, consider what may be the condition of that fleet if Rojestvensky turns out to be a good man.

Six months ago he and his fleet were sent out with this message: "Go; the enemy is stronger than you, but in you lies the sole hope of saving your country from an ignominious peace." What an opportunity for a man! What if the Admiral has diffused this spirit through his fleet?

Why should not six months of facing grimly to the East have turned the recruits into men? Whose courage is more desperate than that of a forlorn hope? The absorbing question to me is whether Rojestvensky is driving forward a flock of trembling sheep or whether he leads the charge of angry bison.

Which is it? H. B.

THE TEACHERS DEFENDED.

Worried "Fond Parent" Reassured by One Who Isn't Worried.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The fond parent who is so solicitous concerning the English used by the school teachers of Manhattan is verily to be pitied! Is, by chance, his or her dear little one under the contaminating influence of some sadly incapable instructor? Was the parent also so unfortunate in childhood days?

One loses patience with questions on the order of "Are their examinations not strict enough, or do they allow themselves to grow careless after receiving diplomas?"

Has the solicitous one ever taken the trouble to look over Superintendent Maxwell's Examinations for License to Teach? Has he or she ever thought of the list of supervisors that would make an incapable or shirking teacher glad of an opportunity to resign?

Yes, even English, good parent, is properly taught and rigidly supervised, and it will not be the fault of your young hopeful's teacher if he grow up aught but a Disraeli or a Stevenson. 42, 18.

Absence of Police Stars.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

A gratifying fact connected with the police parade last Saturday, which many must have noticed, was the absence of the "star" feature, or erstwhile projection of the individual. Individuality was merged, as it should be, in the police department in the whole, which should as a whole stand for efficiency and devotion to duty. The contrast with police parades of former years made last Saturday's function peculiarly dignified, and in fact won for the department a larger esteem and a deeper respect from our citizens. One recalls unpleasantly the bizarre side of some former police parades—the public exhibition of notorious individuals of the force, the effect of which counteracted nearly all moral values supposed to accrue from these annual reviews.

Would Buy the Falkland Islands.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Now that England's Navy has retired from South American waters, the usefulness of the Falkland Islands to her having gone, would it not be a good move on the part of the United States to purchase these islands? Great Britain would doubtless be only too glad to oblige "her greatest colony."

That Dynamic Tree.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Relative to the controversy about trees raising objects as they grow, I can see both how you are right and your observing correspondent in Havana not "mistaken"; for, as the tree grew and the forked branches enlarged, the point of the angle formed thereby would have to rise, and the lodged cannon ball would either become imbedded or gradually pushed or rolled upward.

OUT OF WORK.

Heartsick an' hopeless, jostled by the mob,
Trampin' the pavement lookin' for a job!
Here I'm a-driftin', weary through an' through,
Seekin' employment—anythin' to do!

Youngsters and old uns hurry up an' down,
Each on his errand through this busy town,
Each on his errand, triflin' though it be;
No one is idlin'—as'vin' only me.

Poverty's nothin'! Hunger ain't so bad;
Longin' and loathin'—that's what drives ye mad!
Longin' for action, cravin' for yer part;
Loathin' yer bondage, eatin' up yer heart.

Big, strong, an' able, nothin' of a shirk,
If I was cattle some one'd find me work!
Some one 'ud drive me, single-hitch or span,
If I was cattle!—Pity I'm a man!

I can't be useless! Somethin' must be wrong!
No good o' whinin'? Yes, I'll move along—
Heartsick an' hopeless, jostled by the mob,
Trampin' the pavement lookin' for a job.

OUR DIPLOMATS IN ATTICS.

Ex-Ambassador White Says Pay Them More—Wants Young Blood.

Special to The New York Times.

ITHACA, N. Y., May 9.—Andrew D. White, formerly Ambassador to Germany, spoke before the students of Cornell University this evening on the diplomatic service of the United States. He proposed a general reform of the service. The greatest defect, he declared, was in the matter of housing our representatives abroad.

"Our Ministers sometimes have to live in garrets and sometimes in cellars," said Dr. White, "and if they find lodgings at all in keeping with their office, as is necessary in all the larger capitals, they must spend more than their total salaries for rent. This means that only rich men can accept the higher posts. In this respect our Republic maintains the most bureaucratic and aristocratic diplomatic service in the whole world."

He urged that the salaries of all the higher representatives be increased 50 per cent.

"It should not be permitted," said Mr. White, "for an American Ambassador to impoverish his family in order to maintain his office abroad. I would propose, also, an increase in the diplomatic staffs attached to the embassies."

Mr. White outlined a system of appointment upon examination of young men to the posts of minor importance, from which they should be promoted on showing fitness.

"All the improvements which I am proposing could be carried out to their fullest extent," he said, "at a cost of less than one-half of one cent a year for each person in our country. A good diplomatic service is easily a nation's cheapest defense, for a good diplomatic service can avert all kinds of troubles up to and including war, which costs in a few hours what the whole diplomatic service would cost for a year.

"We should have, as Thomas Jefferson said, a decent respect for the opinions of mankind, and maintain a diplomatic service which would command respect the world over. It must be admitted that in many quarters it does not command that respect now."

5,000 HONOR SCHILLER.

Celebration at Columbia in Which Many Take Part.

While the Schiller centenary was being celebrated throughout all of Germany yesterday 5,000 German residents of New York met at Columbia University here for a celebration under the auspices of the Germanic department of the university. The senior Professor of German, Dr. William H. Carpenter, delivered the principal address of the occasion. Carl Schurz presided at the meeting. After Rossini's overture to "Wilhelm Tell" had been given by the Columbia Philharmonic Society, Mr. Schurz addressed the audience in a short eulogy of Schiller. President Nicholas Murray Butler delivered the address of welcome. Prof. Carpenter's speech followed.

Herr Udo Brachoogel then read an original poem on Schiller, composed for the occasion. Heinrich Conried, impresario of the Metropolitan Opera Company, recited Schiller's "Kraniche des Ibykus," one of Schiller's longer narrative poems. The German Liederkranz sang the "Horseman Song" from "Wallensteins Lager" and the "Fisherman's Song" from "Wilhelm Tell." The Arion Society also sang.

PANAMA ROUTE DRAWBACKS.

Loss of Time in Transit and Too Much Transshipment.

SAN FRANCISCO, May 9.—A matter of great commercial importance to the Pacific Coast is discussed in a report that has been forwarded to Washington by the Chamber of Commerce for the information of President Roosevelt, Secretary Taft of the War Department, and J. L. Bristow, Special Commissioner appointed by President Roosevelt to visit this coast and acquire facts. The question refers to the utility of the Panama route for the movement of freight between San Francisco and the Atlantic States.

"There are reasons why the Panama route cannot be utilized with advantage in the commercial interchange of commodities between San Francisco and the Atlantic States," it says, "and with the steady development of transportation facilities between nations as well as between our own States those reasons are becoming more potential every year. In brief they are but two in number:

"First—Loss of time in transit.

"Second—Increased freight cost made necessary by transshipment from steamer to car, and from car to steamer.

Several speeches were made felicitating Mr. Reid on his appointment, and expressing the compliment to the newspaper profession which it carries.

AHEARN SOLVES A PUZZLE.

Borough President Straightens Tangle in Fifth Avenue House Numbers.

Borough President Ahearn has settled the controversy over street numbers on Fifth Avenue at Twenty-first Street by giving the number 180 to the new building on the northwest corner and 158 to E. H. Van Ingen's structure on the southwest corner. This solution was reached by taking away 158 from the Presbyterian Building, which is on the northwest corner at Twentieth Street, and leaving it with a single number—156. Mr. Ahearn thinks under the conditions one number is enough for any building.

When the Union Clubhouse stood at the northwest corner of Twenty-first Street the entrance was on the side street, and the structure never had a Fifth Avenue number. When the Hudson Realty Company put up the present eleven-story building on the site the owners took steps to get some sort of a Fifth Avenue designation for it.

STATE TO BID FOR LABORERS.

Plan to Relieve Scarcity of Help in Farming Sections.

ALBANY, May 9.—To relieve the scarcity of farm laborers, which has become one of the severest handicaps for the farmers of the State, Commissioner of Agriculture Wieting is arranging to carry out a plan authorized by a bill just signed by the Governor. For many years the department has observed that foreign farmhands and small farmers seldom settled in the East, but went through to the West.

THIRD OF CITY'S PUPILS HAVE POOR EYESIGHT

New System of Examination in Schools Shows This.

FUNDS FOR GLASSES URGED

Of 7,166 Students Examined in April 3,132 Need Medical Attention, Report Shows.

Announcement was made last night at a meeting of the Society of Medical Inspectors of the Health Department for the first time of the result of the new system of physical examination of school children. The new system went into effect in March; before that the work of the Health Department Inspectors dealt merely with the spread of contagious diseases. From March 27 to April 28, under the new system of thorough individual examination, 7,166 school children were examined.

Most striking of all the results, perhaps, was the discovery that 1,276, or more than 17 per cent., suffered from very defective eyesight, this number not being able to read the big letters twenty feet away. Dr. John J. Cronin, Chief of the Division of School Inspection of the Department of Health, read the paper in which the figures were given, and he emphasized particularly the bad sight of New York's school children. The number 1,273 represent only those whose eyes are affected in the worst way; a much larger proportion have lesser defects.

"The Inspectors found," said Dr. Cronin, "within the last few months that about 33 1-3 per cent. of all children in the schools have defects of vision, interfering with the proper pursuit of their studies. Of these, a large number have procured glasses. This has already resulted in an improvement of the school-work, as borne out by the teachers' reports.

"The reason so many children are found backward in their studies is because there are so many with physical defects, such as defective sight and hearing, who are unable to keep up with other children of their age and who retard the progress of the class."

Bad eyesight and bad hearing are not the only maladies from which school children suffer. Of the 7,166 examined in April, the following numbers of cases are shown:

Bad nutrition	683
Enlarged glands (interior)	1,221
Nervous diseases	85
Cardiac diseases	153
Pulmonary diseases	127
Skin diseases	196
Deformity of spine	68
Deformity of chest	100
Defective hearing	305
Bad teeth	1,946
Bad mentality	250
Total cases requiring medical attention	3,132

Dr. Cronin urged that all children with organic diseases be segregated so that their presence should not harm or retard the other pupils.

"Children with St. Vitus's dance," he said, "and other nervous affections should receive special medical attention and should be taught in classes away from normal children. Physical defects of one sort or another are the cause of bad habits, truancy, and moral obliquity in later life. It is the physically defective who leave school early or become hopeless truants. Truancy is the first stage of a criminal career, and by improving the physical condition of children we save many of them from the downward path.

"If some of the unhallowed money which is now causing so much useless talk with reference to its acceptance for the purpose of civilizing savages were directed toward the poor people from whom it came, that money would be sufficiently purified to satisfy all consciences. The poor children of the tenements should be able to have glasses when they need them. The city, too, should appropriate funds to pursue the work so well begun and so as to improve as much as possible the physical status of the school child of the present."

Many Principals and teachers were present to listen to the paper of Dr. Cronin and that of Dr. Floyd M. Crandall, who spoke of Christian Scientists and their relation to the movement toward better health in the schools.

SCHOOL-DAY FIGHT UP TO-DAY

Opponents of Shorter Hours Say Victory is Theirs.

Encouraged by the flood of opposition which has poured in upon the shorter school-day proposition, the Educational Commissioners who are against any change in the present full school day will endeavor to crush their opponents at to-day's meeting of the Board of Education.

All the public hearings held, they say, point to one conclusion—that the people of New York do not want a three and a half hour day for their children. The Committee on Elementary Schools, before whom the hearings were held, probably will report to to-day's meeting.

Commissioner Abraham Stern, the originator of the shorter-day plan, is still sanguine. He said last night that his plan was still very much alive.

"If my opponents start a fight to-morrow," he said, "they will find me ready."

McCLELLAN LETTER SOLD.

Last Piece of Writing General Did Brings $10 at Sale.

The last letter written by Gen. George B. McClellan, and found, sealed and stamped, after his death, was among the interesting autograph letters and documents, mainly of civil war events, sold at auction last evening by the Anderson Company, 5 West Twenty-ninth Street. It is a two-page octavo letter, entirely in Gen. McClellan's handwriting, and dated Orange, N. J., Oct. 28, 1885. It is in an envelope addressed by him—the last stroke of his pen—to an old friend, H. H. Wibert, who had been a partner of Isaac Sherman, Abraham Lincoln's friend, and the Government printer under him.

"I am gaining constantly," the letter reads, "but the Dr. orders perfect quiet and won't allow me to travel yet. I pass the day on a lounge—can't smoke—can't do very much of anything. I hope to be able to get to town on Monday—may possibly do so on Saturday, but doubt it."

The direction on the envelope is in a firm hand, that gives no indication of the fast approaching end of the writer's illustrious career, yet about four hours after addressing and sealing the letter his death occurred. The envelope bears the indorsement, "Found sealed and stamped after the death of Gen. McClellan." This is in the autograph of William C. Prime, the General's lifelong friend and guardian of his son, the present Mayor of New York. The letter sold for $10.

WARSHIPS' WIRELESS TALKS.

Admiral Evans Instances Successful Test of the Apparatus.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, May 9.—Admiral Evans, who is in command of the North Atlantic fleet, came to Washington today from Hampton Roads to consult the Secretary of the Navy regarding the recent cruise of the battleship squadron in the West Indies.

Interesting reports are made of communications had between the vessels at sea with wireless telegraphy. While proceeding north from the target field and when about seventy miles southeast of Cape Hatteras, a wireless message was received from the battleship Illinois, which was outside the Virginia capes with the Marcellus testing a coaling device, and a considerable conversation ensued. The distance was about 160 miles.

At the close of the race of the big battleships the Missouri, although having ordinary signaling distance, was found to be communicated with by wireless

THE PRESIDENT GREETED BY HIGH SCHOOL GIRLS

They Hand Him Bouquets in a Nebraska Town.

IS SPEEDING TO CHICAGO

Says He Is Unrepentant Concerning the Panama Canal—Speaks of Rate Control.

GRAND ISLAND, Neb., May 9.—The Presidential special train which left Denver for Chicago at 7 o'clock this morning arrived at the Union Pacific Station here at 6:20 o'clock this evening.

Despite the rain 5,000 people had gathered to see and hear him. The pilot train arrived at 6:10, and promptly at the minute the Presidential train pulled into the station. The President, smiling and happy, had already begun to address the throng when Miss Anna Garmire and the members of the high school graduating class worked their way through the crowd and presented bouquets of flowers, on behalf of the business men of Grand Island and the schools.

The President expressed his appreciation especially as coming from the school children, venturing the assurance that he needed not to call attention to his fondness for school children, a remark that caused much laughter.

He had barely closed a brief address when his train pulled out of the yards amid shouts and hurrahs.

With only four stops for speeches, the trip was uneventful. The speeches were all brief and were devoted almost entirely to the discussion of the country through which the President passed, and to the subject of irrigation. He spoke longest at North Platte, Neb., where he said that nothing would count more in the next half century in building up the United States than what was done in irrigation.

PANAMA CANAL POLICY.

In his speech in Denver last night the President made the following comment on the Panama Canal project:

"It was perhaps unnecessary for me to say that I am perfectly aware that many most admirable gentlemen disagreed with me in my action toward the Panama Canal, but I am in an unrepentent frame of mind. The ethical conception upon which I acted was that I did not intend that Uncle Sam should be held up.

"But without regard to that, when the canal comes into operation I think it will have a very important regulatory effect in connection with the transcontinental commerce of the Republic. I think when such is the case, these great railroads will have to revise their way of looking at the interests of certain inland cities."

Mr. Roosevelt then discussed railroad rate legislation, saying:

"I have spoken of the policy of extending the powers of the Inter-State Commerce Commission and of giving them particularly the power to fix rates and to have the rates that they fix go into effect practically at once.

"As I say, that represents in my mind part of what should be the general policy of this country. The policy of giving not to the State, but to the National Government, an increased supervisory and regulatory power over corporations is the first step, and to my mind the most important step.

"In the days of the fathers of the older among you the highways of commerce for civilized nations were what they had always been; that is, waterways and roads. Therefore they were open to all who chose to travel upon them. Within the last two generations we have seen systems grow up, and now the typical highway of commerce is the railroad. Compared with the railroad, the ordinary road for wheeled vehicles and the waterways, whether natural or artificial, have lost all their importance.

"Here in Colorado, for instance, it is the railroads which are the only highways that you need take into account in dealing with the question of commerce in the State or outside the State. Therefore, under this changed system we see highways of commerce grow up, each of which is controlled by a single corporation or individual; sometimes several of them being controlled in combination by corporations, or by a few individuals.

NATIONAL CONTROL NEEDED.

"When such is the case, in my judgment it is absolutely necessary that the Nation, for the State cannot possibly do it, should assume a supervisory and regulatory function over the great corporations which practically control the highways of commerce."

Alluding to the future of the nation, he said that in times past republic after republic had existed and had gone down to destruction, sometimes because the republic was turned into a Government of the poor, who plundered the rich; sometimes because it was turned into a Government of the rich, who exploited the poor.

"We have the right to look forward with confident hope to the future of this Republic," he continued, "because it will not and shall not become the Republic of any class, either poor or rich; because it will and shall remain as its founders intended it to be, and its rescuers under Abraham Lincoln intended it to be, a Government where every man, rich or poor, so long as he did his duty to his neighbor, enjoyed his full rights, received the guarantee of justice, and had justice exacted from him in return."

OMAHA, Neb., May 9.—Late this afternoon it was decided to change the route of the Presidential train and send it across the Missouri River at Blair, Neb., twenty-five miles north of Omaha. When the train reached Fremont it was turned over to the Northwestern Road, which took the train across the cut-off to Missouri Valley, Iowa, where the main line branches off and runs direct to Chicago.

The Chicago and Northwestern Road sent a pilot train out of Omaha at 9:30 to-night to Missouri Valley, where it will take up the President's special and take it eastward.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, May 9.—Four carriage rides, three receptions, a luncheon, and one banquet are arranged for the entertainment of President Roosevelt during his visit of twelve and one-half hours in Chicago to-morrow.

"A strenuous half day" is the plan of three clubs who have his entertainment in charge. Only two hours are provided for rest between the time of the President's arrival at noon and his departure for Washington at 12:30 o'clock next morning, and it is expected even the rest hours will be devoted to impromptu receptions. After being entertained by the Merchants' Club, the President is to be the guest of the Hamilton Club, and later of the Iroquois Club.

Shorter Day for Express Employes.

The big express companies and many of the local companies have deemed it wise, after May 14, in justice to those of their employes who now have to work in the evening hours, to stop their wagon collections from both business houses and private residences at 6:30 P. M., instead of 7 P. M., as at present. The express offices throughout the city will be closed not later than 7:30 P. M.

Presbyterians' Big Mission Year.

AUBURN, N. Y., May 9.—The Rev. W. H. Hubbard, Secretary of the Special Committee on Systematic Beneficence of the Presbyterian Church, received to-day reports of the income of the eight boards for the year ended May 1, 1905. The aggregate income is $3,263,755, the largest ever reported. Foreign missions received $1,161,919.

People's Line to Stop at Harlem Pier.

To save residents of Harlem and uptown districts a journey downtown, the People's Line steamers C. W. Morse and Adirondack will, beginning May 15, stop at the pier foot of One Hundred and Twenty-sixth Street, North River, every day, after leaving Pier 32, North River.

WHITE WINGS DRENCHED CAR.

Fled "Mad Dog," but Not Fast Enough to Escape Wet Women.

Two "white wings" were washing the pavement at Sixty-seventh Street and Broadway at noon yesterday when they heard cries of "Mad dog!" Looking up Broadway, the two men saw a small dog running toward them. The street sweepers dropped the hose they were holding and ran away as fast as they could.

At about this time an open car on the Broadway line came up toward the corner, and the end of the fire hose bounced on the pavement with such force that all the water flew into the car and over the clothing of the passengers.

There were cries of "Stop the car!" from half a dozen of the women. When the car stopped all alighted and started back to the corner, where they met the "white wings" face to face.

There were many threats of "I'll sue the city" and "I think you could have been more careful." The Sergeant on duty in the West Sixty-eighth Street Police Station, just around the corner, heard the commotion and sent Patrolman Barlow out to ascertain the cause of it all. The appearance of the policeman, however, instead of having a soothing effect, only added more fuel to the fire for the time.

At last, after Barlow had heard many threats to "Sue the Police Department," he managed to quiet the women, and the street cleaners resumed the work of washing the pavement.

All efforts to find the dog were without avail, as it had disappeared by that time.

SAYS DOCTORS SCARE PEOPLE

Physician Affirms Smallpox and Spotted Fever Are Not Contagious.

HARTFORD, Conn., May 9.—At the annual meeting of the Connecticut Eclectic Medical Association to-day Dr. S. B. Munn of Waterbury, in a report on contagious and infectious diseases, declared that smallpox and spotted fever were not contagious.

"The greatest disease of to-day," he said, "is fear which physicians inoculate into the community. There is an epidemic of everything with the old school physicians except one of common sense."

He said that he had noticed since the State Board of Health had been organized the death rate had increased rather than decreased. "Doctors," he said, "do more to frighten people into diseases than any other one cause." He gave it as his opinion that vaccination was generally advocated because it meant money in the doctor's pocket.

PHILIPPINE CHURCH CLAIMS.

Over $1,000,000 Demanded for Use of Property by Our Troops.

WASHINGTON, May 9.—Secretary Taft has been informed by Mgr. Falconio, Apostolic Delegate, that a number of claims arising from use by United States troops of Church property in the Philippines amounting to $1,000,000 or $1,500,000 have been presented here.

The Secretary cabled the Philippine Commission, and was informed that the matter had been turned over to Major Gen. Wade, who was in command when the claims were presented there. The Secretary will make an inquiry of Gen. Wade, now commanding officer of the Atlantic Division.

SCHOOL FOR CENSUS TAKERS.

Chief Statistician Hunt Begins to Instruct State Enumerators.

ALBANY, May 9.—A school of instruction for the Supervisors of Enumeration was opened to-day at the office of the Secretary of State by Chief Statistician W. C. Hunt.

The pupils will be the men in charge of the coming State census in the large cities. The enumeration will not start until June 1.

WHAT IS DOING IN SOCIETY.

The chief event of interest in the fashionable world this week is the Japanese tableaus which are to be held on Thursday afternoon at the Belasco Theatre, and in which Mme. Uchida, Mrs. Hugh Fraser, and others are not only interested, but are to take part. The play will, in reality, be a series of living pictures, and the story will be told just as the tableaus appear. The Belasco has not only a real but a false stage, and in the foreground of the latter, before the first curtain rises on the real stage, a youth is supposed to be sleeping; an old dame in Japanese dress draws near him and, waking him, begins to tell him a connected story of incidents she recalls and as the youth dozes off he sees in his dreams, as the audience does in reality, the picture his grandmother has just repeated to him. The affair will be a very fashionable one, and many prominent men, as well as women, have subscribed as patrons. There has been a remarkable advance sale of seats, and those desirous of securing any would better lose no time in doing so.

Berries Condemned by Carload.

The work of the Board of Health has been greatly increased recently by the inspection of fruit which has been brought to the city both by rail and steamboat. Yesterday three carloads were condemned.

ALDERMEN MAY DELAY TRANSIT PLANS 6 YEARS

Threaten to Carry Power-Curbing Bill to Highest Court.

ENGAGE COUNSEL TO FIGHT

It Is Said That Four-Tracking of Second Avenue Elevated Might Stop Aldermanic Protests.

Serious delays to all contemplated rapid transit projects are feared by the members of the Rapid Transit Commission as a result of the litigation in prospect over the determination of various members of the Board of Aldermen to test the constitutionality of the bill recently passed by the Legislature to shear the board of all power over franchises.

It became known yesterday that not only L. Laflin Kellogg, but ex-Judge Dillon as well, had been retained by the Sullivan contingent in the board to make the fight in the courts, with the determination not only to carry the matter to the Court of Appeals, but to the Supreme Court of the United States, should that be necessary. Such action would necessarily consume some five or six years, as has been the case in the test of the constitutionality of the franchise tax law, which was begun in 1899 and which still is awaiting a decision by the highest court in the land. Any such delay caused by a test of the Aldermanic bill, the Rapid Transit Commissioners fear, would prevent the letting of any further subway contracts for years unless Gov. Higgins should withhold his expected favorable action on the bill until the very end of the period in which he has to act on it and allow the Rapid Transit Commission to rush the present plans to adoption before that time expires.

As the Governor could delay action on the bill until June 5, thirty days after final adjournment of the Legislature, there would be just time enough to approve the plans for the new routes if the Board of Aldermen would give its consent, which, however, hardly is expected. The Rapid Transit Commissioners, by dint of hard work, could pass finally on the pending plans by Friday of this week, which would allow them to go to the Board of Aldermen on Tuesday next, May 16, for action. If the board would consent to rush such action it could advertise the proposed routes for the necessary ten days and then hold a hearing on May 23 and approve the routes in the board hearing on May 29. This would send the documents to the Mayor on May 31 or June 1, and allow him his three days in which to act and return the measures to the Rapid Transit Commission. Then the Governor could sign the bill depriving the Aldermen of all further power over franchises.

As the Aldermen know that such a move would be favored by the Metropolitan-Pennsylvania-New Haven railroad interests, and as the Aldermen charge these same interests with having been back of the action of the Legislature in passing the bills curtailing the powers of the Board of Aldermen, it is considered likely that the Aldermen will favor rushing through the pending routes.

At the offices of the Rapid Transit Commissioners different opinions were expressed, the members saying that they had heard that the Aldermen intended to go to the Supreme Court of the United States in their fight. One of the members, who did not want his name used, said that such action would hold matters up in the air for six years and prevent subway building in that time. He also said that it had been intimated to the Commissioners that if they would recede from their opposition to granting a franchise to double the tracking of the Interborough Second Avenue Elevated line, and permit it to be made a four-track structure from the Bronx to City Hall, much of the opposition to the Aldermanic bills and also to the plans of the commission in regard to the next subways would disappear.

MR. FORNES TO GO TO ITALY.

Sullivan Says He Will Look After Franchises, Meanwhile.

President Charles V. Fornes presided over the session of the Board of Aldermen yesterday for the last time in some months. To-day he will sail for Naples on the Sardegna of the Italian Line. Both Alderman McCall for the majority and Alderman Meyers for the minority made speeches wishing Mr. Fornes a pleasant trip and a safe return.

"And I want to add that the President's successor is amply able to look after all franchise matters in his absence," remarked Alderman Sullivan, who succeeds President Fornes.

The board adopted a resolution appropriating $60,000 for an extension of bridges over the Port Morris Branch Railroad at Elton Avenue, One Hundred and Sixty-second Street, and Washington Avenue, in the Bronx. Another resolution adopted appropriated $82,800 for the improvement of the police station houses. The board also appropriated $7,550 to purchase the collection of palms, orchids, ferns, and geraniums owned by the late W. A. Brown of Flatbush.

After considerable debate the board adopted the adverse report of the Finance Committee on the appropriation of $1,000,000 for playgrounds for the public schools.

Vice President Sullivan offered a resolution, which was adopted, calling on the Department of Health, the Charities Department, and the Tenement House Department to examine and report on the growing custom of landlords to refuse to rent houses and apartments to people who have children. The departments also are requested to get an opinion from the Corporation Counsel to see if the landlords cannot be curbed by the Aldermanic power.

BISHOP PRAISES THE STAGE

Tendency for Good, Says Dr. Potter at Actors' Fund Meeting.

At the anniversary meeting of the Actors' Fund of America at the Broadway Theatre yesterday afternoon Bishop Potter urged the members not to be "too exclusive"—to go outside their membership and ask aid. He was heartily applauded. Other speakers were D Cady Herrick, Daniel Frohman, President of the fund, who presided, and Wilton Lackaye.

The afternoon's programme included the overture from "William Tell" by an orchestra led by Gustav Saenger and composed of musicians from the Empire, Lyceum, Hudson, and Herald Square Theatre Orchestras; a song by Marie Tempest, songs by the Criterion Quartet, and the "Coronation March" by the orchestra.

Bishop Potter said that the stage had a great opportunity for exerting an influence for good or evil. He said he believed the tendency was for good.

"I should feel ashamed," said Bishop Potter, "if I did not here resent the action of the Young Men's Christian Association of Pittsburg in their unjust reasonings. I seldom have seen such narrowness. Men of the dramatic profession, and the women, stand in exactly the same light as the rest of us. There is good and there is bad on the stage—as there is in law, in medicine, in Wall Street, and in other walks of business and professional life."

The President's references to A. M. Palmer, Louis Aldrich, Joseph Jefferson, and Mrs. Gilbert each provoked much applause, although the references were only to the effect that it was a matter of regret that the persons mentioned were "absent." President Frohman said that promised donations for the Actors' Home had seriously fallen off.

At the annual meeting of the fund yesterday the officers were re-elected.

"MRS. BATTLE'S BATH."

Amusing Farce Seen at the Madison Square Theatre.

The dramatization of household utilities, begun some years ago by Clyde Fitch, has been continued by H. H. Morrell and E. J. Malyon, whose one-act farce "Mrs. Battle's Bath" was seen at the Madison Square Theatre last evening. This addition to the regular bill at that theatre is a trifle which, if not quite as light as air, is still sufficiently diverting to piece out an evening pleasantly.

The farce retails the experiences of two young people who meet in a bathroom at midnight on Christmas Eve, under conditions somewhat embarrassing to both. The Right Hon. the Earl of Bedford, in dressing gown and slippers, comes to the bathroom to enjoy his "tub" only to find that Mrs. Mildred Battle, a young widow, has previously arrived bent on a similar mission. As the man enters, the door slams, and it develops that the lock is a patent one that will not open in response to the turning of the knobs. The lady is indignant, the gentleman apologetic. Both in turn suggest plans for extricating themselves from their unfortunate position, but to no avail.

Finally the pair, who are really in love with one another, sit down on the edge of the bathtub to talk it over. His Lordship proposes, and when he asks Mrs. Battle if she thinks they "will pull well together" she suddenly bethinks herself of the fact that by pulling both doorknobs at once the lock will be sprung. This happy thought results in freedom.

"Mrs. Battle's Bath" is not brilliant, as these things go, but it will serve. It is played by Hassard Short and Dorothy Donnelly, both of whom manage to extract the full share of humor from the situations which engage them.

GERMAN SINGERS FOR OPERA.

Bertha Morena, Hilda Schoene, and Heinrich Knote Engaged.

BERLIN, May 9.—Emil Ledner, the Berlin representative of the Metropolitan opera company of New York, has just made several important engagements for next season.

Fräulein Bertha Morena of the Royal Opera at Munich, with whom the Metropolitan management has been negotiating for two years, has now signed for three months.

Heinrich Knote of Munich has been re-engaged, and will sing in the United States next season forty times in five months, and in the following season twenty times.

Fräulein Hilda Schoene of the Mannheim Court Theatre has agreed to become a permanent member of the Metropolitan company upon the expiration of her present contract at Mannheim.

Stage Manager J. Goldberg of the Elberfeld City Theatre has been engaged for the Metropolitan for a term of years.

DREW AS HEAD OF PLAYERS.

Jefferson Told Him He Would Be His Natural Successor.

Special to The New York Times.

KANSAS CITY, Mo., May 9.—A telegram received to-day by John Drew, who is playing an engagement at the Willis Wood Theatre, from H. R. Hodges, Secretary of The Players of New York, officially announced his election as President of the organization.

"It is a very great honor, and I appreciate it more than I can say offhand," said Mr. Drew. "Some years ago Mr. Jefferson said to me: 'When I retire from The Players you will be my natural successor as President. I shall not retire, however, until I retire from life.'

"Mr. Jefferson, you know, succeeded Mr. Booth as President, and it was one of the ideas of his generous mind that since the three families, Booth, Jefferson, and Drew, had been so long associated with the stage, it would be right and natural that I should continue the succession in The Players."

Damrosch Concerts on New York Roof.

Walter Damrosch, who returned to New York from Europe yesterday, will immediately begin rehearsals of his New York Symphony Orchestra for the series of Summer night concerts which are to begin on the New York Theatre roof on May 20. During his roof garden season Mr. Damrosch intends to devote certain nights every week to special programmes. On Monday nights the more popular symphonies, such as Dvorak's "American Symphony," Raff's "Im Walde," and Tschaikowsky's No. 5, while on Friday nights excerpts from Wagner's "Rienzi," the Nibelungen trilogy, and "Tristan" will be played. Saturdays and Sunday evenings the programme will be devoted to selections of a lighter character. Mr. Damrosch's stay will be brief, as the roof garden will open for the regular Summer season early in June.

THEATRICAL NOTES.

Edward E. Rose, the playwright, was engaged yesterday by the management of the New York Roof Garden and Wistaria Grove, to stage the Delsarte burlesque, "When We Were Forty-one."

James K. Hackett has arranged to produce a new play next week at the Nixon Theatre, Pittsburg. It is announced as "a dramatic tale of Brittany," entitled "The House of Silence," and written by Herman K. Viele. There is a prologue and four acts.

William Jerome and Jean Schwartz, who wrote the lyrics and music for the coming Klaw & Erlanger production "The Ham Tree," have been retained by the management to write the lyrics and music for "Lifting the Lid," which opens the New Aerial Theatre the latter part of the month, and for "In Tammany Hall," in which Joseph Hawthorne will begin his tour at the Herald Square Theatre next season.

There will be a special matinée this week Thursday by Ethel Barrymore in "A Doll's House" at the Lyceum. Her season ends Saturday night.

An extra matinée of "Buster Brown" will be given at the Fourteenth Street Theatre Friday afternoon. In order to accommodate the school children, the performance will not begin until 3 o'clock.

Fola La Follette, Gov. La Follette's daughter, will make her first appearance with Proctor's One Hundred and Twenty-fifth Street Theatre stock company on May 15 as Nellie in "The Christian."

CLASS TEACHERS WAR OVER EQUALITY PLAN

Nomination of Woman for Presidency Causes Bitter Fight.

HISSES, JEERS, CATCALLS

Fact That More Than One Ticket Is in the Field Will Postpone the Election.

Harmony was an unknown quantity at yesterday's meeting of the Class Teachers' Association, held in Public School No. 15, Schermerhorn Street and Third Avenue, Brooklyn. Making the equalization of the salaries of men and women teachers the issue, the woman's suffrage element of the organization disregarded all precedent and nominated a woman for the Presidency. A bitter fight followed.

Because of a provision in the by-laws of the organization that printed ballots must be distributed a week previous to an election when there is more than one ticket, no decision was reached yesterday. The majority of the 300 present appeared to favor the suffrage ticket, and as there are nearly 2,000 teachers in the association, it is hard to tell which side will triumph.

The fight started about two weeks ago, when the "Suffrage" faction sent a circular to all the class teachers of the city urging them to band together, elect a "womanly woman" to the Presidency of the association, and then establish the principle of "equal pay for equal work."

Angered at a portion of this circular which, they claimed, insinuated that the President of the association was using "his honorable office for the furtherance of private ambitions," the anti-suffrage members drew up a circular in reply, which said that the original was unofficial. War was the result. Yesterday's meeting was turbulent and frequently interrupted by jeers and catcalls.

The first shot was fired by the "man crowd," as the Suffragists dubbed their opponents. Resolutions eulogizing the work done by President John B. Cottrell of Public School No. 19, Brooklyn, were read by representatives from Schools Nos. 45, 15, and 35. They were greeted with hisses.

Miss Augusta Beck, one of the leaders in the Suffrage movement, then took the floor.

"How many of you have signed the payroll and seen upon it the name of a man who is doing the same work you are, but who is receiving almost double your salary? [Cheers and applause.]

"Haven't you felt humiliated?" [Groans and cries of 'Yes! Yes!']

"Then let us insist that the injustice be remedied."

Miss Nellie L. Aitken, Vice President of the association, opposed the "equalization of salaries" plan and was rewarded with jeers.

Sidney Walmsley, graduating class teacher in Public School No. 15, took up the cudgels for his side, and told of amid-cheers and hisses what the masculine Presidents had done for the organization.

The tickets which will be voted on are as follows:

Suffragists—President—Miss Anna Louise Goerching, Public School No. 44; Vice President—Mrs. Sara A. Waters, Public School No. 109; Corresponding Secretary—Clara M. Case, Public School No. 73; Treasurer—Mary E. McMullen, Public School No. 137; Recording Secretary—Bertha B. Kracke, Public School No. 144.

Anti-Suffragists—President—John B. Cottrell, Public School No. 19; Vice President—Nellie Aitken, Public School No. 2; Treasurer—Charlotte E. Nolliman, Public School No. 15; Corresponding Secretary—E. Louella Nichols, Public School No. 70; Recording Secretary—Miss Forean, Public School No. 35.

The Tyranny of the Dark

In this powerful novel Hamlin Garland has entered a new and fascinating field—that of the occult. The heroine is a girl—Western, delightful, lovable. The romance of her life, involving her lover, who finally rescues her from this "tyranny of the dark," makes this book stand out a striking departure in modern fiction. It is a strong story in a strange and wonderful setting. Who has not felt this tyranny of the dark, and longed for rescue through the force of affection?

The Slanderers

"This novel, by Warwick Deeping, author of Uther and Igraine, so agreeably remembered, shows that he is as much at home in his portrayal of modern life as he was in the region of Arthurian romance. The style is insistingly picturesque—warm and glowing."—The Beacon.

"There can be no question of Mr. Deeping's versatility. The same idealistic vein with the glint of true poesy runs through this modern story which made his Arthurian romances so fascinating."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

The Masquerader

Things move so fast nowadays that even the most successful book can hope to be hardly more than a nine-days wonder. And yet The Masquerader, which instantly sprang into popular favor on its appearance seven months ago, still holds its own. It is a novel of such tremendous force, a story so full of life and interest, that it continues to hold the whole reading public fascinated by its magic power.

Calamine Is Free of Duty—Other Decisions.

In a decision by General Appraiser Fischer yesterday the Board of United States General Appraisers sustained a claim made by C. G. Brewster of Laredo, Texas, holding that certain ore imported by him is free of duty under the provision in the Dingley tariff for calamine. The appraising officials returned the merchandise for duty as zinc ore at the rate of 20 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. Fischer says samples of the merchandise were submitted to the Government chemist, from which it appears that the importation is calamine. The Collector of Customs is ordered to make a reliquidation of the entries in accordance with the finding of the board.

Other importers' protests sustained yesterday were by Boessneck, Broesel & Co., the Lichtenstein Millinery Company, William Schroeder & Co., Albert Lorsch & Co., New York; Bun Fong Low, S. Y. Tank & Co., Boston; Kuhles & Stock, St. Paul.

Claims overruled were by Knauth, Nachod & Fuhne, D. R. James & Brother, John Kissock & Co., Samuel Schiff & Co., Zimmermann & Meyer, Edward Thomas & Co., H. THE FINANCIAL MARKETS

Stocks Strong; Call Money Easy, 2@2¾ Per Cent.

Easier Foreign Political and Financial Situation Promotes Local Improvement in Prices and Sentiment.

Yesterday's business upon the Stock Exchange was in essential respects the opposite of Monday's. The activity in the first hour was on a rising instead of a falling scale, and upon London support instead of London pressure. The closing hour also was a little off from the day's best instead of a little up from the worst, as on the previous day. The closing reaction, however, signified nothing more than moderate profit taking, the improved sentiment being undisturbed. Looking backward it seems now that Monday's unsettlement might not have been so serious if the markets had not been in a condition susceptible to disturbance. The situation was serious enough, but London and New York would have shown more stability if there had not existed the vulnerable account in London, whose closing out depressed our own sensitive situation. Yesterday, as on Monday, Paris set the example of equanimity, although it might have been looked to as leader of the decline.

The cheers which greeted Premier Balfour's statement of France's affirmation of her position regarding her duties as neutral give the keynote of the day's better feeling. To this was added the fact that there was no Equitable meeting whose proceedings were to be awaited anxiously. Sterling was weaker upon pressure of security bills, checking premature discussions regarding possible gold exports. The crop news was mixed. The Government's weekly budget reported "highly favorable" conditions, with qualifications, a leading private estimate was less favorable, and Michigan reported an improvement during April instead of deterioration of 25 points last year. Throughout the season last year's exceptionally poor conditions will afford unusually encouraging comparisons, and the first of these is due to-day, the declining tone of the produce markets being both a reflection of the news received and a discounting of the news anticipated. The intelligence regarding the railway rate question was as conflicting as possible. Washington sent a forecast of no thoroughfare for legislation, and President Roosevelt made a speech repeating his position regarding railways, and extending it to include Federal regulation of all corporations. Copper metal was weak for the second day, but Amalgamated improved with the rest. Indeed, the absence of exceptional movements shows that the day's influences were of a general character. Rock Island was the day's conspicuous laggard, and as it is known that those especially interested in it are inactive in the market, its decline is not surprising.

DELAWARE AND HUDSON.

Stockholders Approve $5,000,000 Issue —Lease Satisfactory.

The stockholders of the Delaware and Hudson Railroad at a special meeting yesterday voted to approve the issuing of $5,000,000 new capital stock needed to provide for the conversion of $10,000,000 3½ per cent. bonds of the Albany and Susquehanna Railroad. The bonds are convertible into Delaware and Hudson stock at $500 on a thousand-dollar bond and will be used to redeem $3,000,000 7 per cent. and $7,000,000 6 per cent. bonds maturing next year.

The stockholders ratified the modified lease of the Chateaugay and Lake Placid Railway and elected William S. Opdyke a Director of the road in the place of the late R. Somers Hayes.

AMERICAN MALTING PLAN.

Stockholders Asked to Consider a Reorganization Scheme.

J. G. Jenkins, President of the First National Bank of Brooklyn, is sending out a circular to stockholders of the American Malting Company in which he asks them if they would accept a plan of reorganization for the company constructed on the following lines:

1. To reduce the capital stock from $15,000,000 preferred and $15,000,000 common to $9,000,000 preferred and $6,000,000 common. 2. To make the preferred noncumulative. 3. To exchange the old preferred for 60 per cent. of its par value in new preferred and the old common for 40 per cent. of its par value in new common.

COMMODITY PRICES.

The price of staples shows a further decline as compared with last month's figures. Dun's Index Number of commodity prices proportioned to consumption was $97.564 on May 1, 1905, against $99.206 a month previous and $102.208 a year ago.

Commenting on these figures, Dun's Review says: "The decrease of 1.6 per cent. during the month of April was entirely due to the lower level of quotations for articles of food, which comprise about one-half of the aggregate, and which declined 3½ per cent. All other classes showed a small advance, except miscellaneous products, which changed less than 1 per cent. Collapse of speculative inflation of wheat was a prominent factor in the month's variations, producing a more wholesome condition in the markets for the leading cereal, and other grain was influenced to some extent, making the fall in breadstuffs almost 8 per cent. This downward movement was directly due to the liberal marketing of wheat in response to prospects of a very large yield this year, and favorable weather conditions tended to lower the position of other agricultural products. With the better movement of staples there was a larger distribution of all merchandise, and the expanding prosperity of the country accelerated the demand for manufactured articles, incidentally strengthening the markets for wearing apparel and iron and steel."

LONDON BROKER FAILS.

E. C. Hawkins Long About 40,000 Shares, Mostly Americans.

LONDON, May 9.—The failure of E. C. Hawkins, a stock broker, was announced on the Stock Exchange this morning. He was long about 40,000 shares of stock, principally Missouri Pacific, Union Pacific, Ontario and Western, United States Steel, and Mexicans.

Mr. Hawkins's liabilities are estimated at from $250,000 to $300,000. A number of small jobbers are involved.

THE LONDON MARKET.

LONDON, May 9.—Money was more plentiful in the market to-day owing to Japan purchasing Treasury bills. Discounts were easy in view of the condition of Paris exchange and the fact that gold arrivals are going to the Bank of England instead of abroad.

Operators on the Stock Exchange had shaken off most of their nervousness over the political situation and the tone was more cheerful, prices slowly improving on repurchases. The recent liquidation also has eased the situation. Consols and home rails were buoyant.

Americans opened steady and improved to a fraction over parity, principally on Wall Street support. The undertone was steadier, the feeling of uncertainty having been cleared away by the announcement of the failure of E. C. Hawkins, a stock broker. In the afternoon prices further advanced, Union Pacific and Southern Pacific being the features. Prices closed firm.

Foreigners were steady. Japanese recovered slightly. Imperial Japanese Government 6s of 1904 were quoted at 101.

Kaffirs rallied somewhat.

Bar silver firm at 26¼d per ounce.

Money, 2@2½ per cent.

The rate of discount in the open market for short bills is 2½@2 5-16 per cent. The rate of discount in the open market for three months' bills is 2½@2 5-16 per cent.

The amount of bullion taken into the Bank of England on balance to-day was £45,000.

Gold premiums are quoted as follows: Madrid, 31.85; Lisbon, 9.

BOSTON STOCK MARKET.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, May 9.—The local money market to-day was very dull and rates unchanged. The usual table follows:

Call loans, 3@3½ per cent.; time loans, collateral, 3½@4½ per cent.; time loans, mercantile paper, 3¾@4 per cent.; clearing house loans, 2½ per cent.; New York funds, 5 cents discount and par. Clearings, $27,147,104; balances, $1,900,909; subtreasury debit, $21,786.

Outside of one or two stocks that had a little life, the Boston market was very quiet. Commission houses had few orders near going prices. A little selling was seen in spots, but nothing developed that would attract attention. The strength shown by Amalgamated was without effect on local copper shares, which continued quiet until the closing. The complete list of transactions follows:

TRADING IN BALTIMORE.

Special to The New York Times.

BALTIMORE, May 9.—The market was rather slow but steady to-day. The Cotton Duck committee's plan for consolidation has received the approval of about $4,000,000 out of the issue of $6,000,000 of the income bonds of the Mount Vernon-Woodberry Cotton Duck Company. The announcement of the plan had no special effect on the stock market except a fractional gain in the first mortgage bonds of the Mount Vernon-Woodberry Company. The first impression created by the plan was generally favorable, and there was some figuring as to what the new securities would sell for. It was estimated that the new preferred stock should bring about 35 and the new common stock about 15, although higher values were also placed. If these figures worked out they would be equivalent to 40 for the income bonds. Around current market values at 34 for the income bonds they represent about 30 for the new preferred stock and 10 for the new common stock. The sales were: Shares, 54; bonds, $85,000, as follows:

THE OUTSIDE SECURITIES

Active Issues Strong in Generally Dull Market.

Purchases of Northern Securities Stubs for European Account—First Sales in New Pennsylvania Bonds.

Trading in the outside market yesterday was very quiet. A majority of the few stocks that were active showed considerable strength. Several gains of a point or more were recorded, but the changes in most stocks were insignificant. Northern Securities was the most active issue and the strongest. United Copper was bid up a couple of points and ended with a gain of an even point, while the preferred sold as high as 73, declining in the later trading to 71¾.

•*•

PENNSYLVANIA'S new convertible 3½s were dealt in for the first time. They sold from 99¼ up to 100¼ without an intervening sale, showing how narrow the market was despite the importance of the issue.

•*•

NORTHERN SECURITIES STUBS were fairly active at 400 and slightly above that price. A considerable proportion of the recent buying of the stubs has been for foreign account. They have been bought on European orders and shipped to the other side. It is a somewhat curious coincidence that the same houses that have been shipping a good deal of Union Pacific to London have also been sending Northern Securities stubs.

BUSINESS TROUBLES.

New York City.

G. ROTHSTEIN & Co.—Judge MacLean of the Supreme Court has appointed Max B. Fdiedman, temporary receiver of the assets of the firm of G. Rothstein & Co., manufacturers of children's and youths' clothing at 179 Greene Street, in a suit brought by Betti Friedman against her partner, George Rothstein, for a dissolution of the partnership. The receiver is the husband of Betti Friedman. The partnership was formed on Nov. 30, 1904, with a capital of $3,238. The firm's trouble is attributed to the suicide on April 15 of Morris Rothstein, a brother of George Rothstein. Judge MacLean ordered notes for his brother to the amount of $6,000, practically wiping out, it is asserted, the assets of the firm of G. Rothstein & Co. Of these notes $3,500 were indorsed by him, it is said, without the knowledge of Mrs. Friedman. The firm has been sued on one of these notes by a bank, and other suits are expected, and application was made for the receiver so as to protect Mrs. Friedman's interest in the firm and prevent the noteholders getting a preference over the actual creditors of the firm. The liabilities are $8,000, including the $6,000 in notes assigned. At a meeting of creditors of Morris Rothstein about ten days ago an offer of settlement was made at 35 cents on the dollar.

Out of Town.

CINCINNATI.—James M. Sprague was appointed receiver for W. H. Ellis & Co., contractors, by Judge Spiegel of the Common Pleas Court, on application of Harry E. Kennedy, silent partner. Mr. Sprague gave bond in the sum of $100,000. Mr. Ellis, as individual, filed a deed of assignment to Harlow G. Sarrell. Mr. Ellis has been concerned in litigation which has tied up his capital. He constructed the Harrison Building, in Columbus; the Soldiers and Sailors' Memorial Hall, in Xenia, and a building of similar character in Columbus. Realizable assets are placed at about $250,000 and liabilities at $100,000.

PETITIONS IN BANKRUPTCY.

DAVID ELIOWICH.—Judge Holt of the United States District Court has appointed Archibald Douglas receiver in bankruptcy of the assets of David Eliowich, dealer in crockery at 113 Bowery, and fixed his bond at $5,000. The assets are estimated at $8,000, and liabilities at $17,000.

JACOB FRIEDMAN.—A petition in bankruptcy has been filed against Jacob Friedman, dealer in housefurnishing and crockery at 306 Tenth Avenue, by the following creditors: Timothy Leary, $250; Harry Greenberg, $150, and Isaac Glaser, $300. It was alleged that he has transferred accounts, made payments to prefer, and admitted in writing his inability to pay his debts. He has been in business seven years, and said he carried a stock of $6,000.

IN THE REAL ESTATE FIELD

Site Bought for New Business Building Near Times Square —Fourth Avenue Corner Sold at High Figure— Lower Fifth Avenue Properties at Auction— Other Dealings.

A noteworthy departure from the character of building operations hitherto undertaken in the section between Times Square and Sixth Avenue is foreshadowed by a transaction closed yesterday, affecting the properties 120 and 122 West Forty-fifth Street. These two parcels, three-story brick dwellings, on plot 33.4 by 100.5, have been sold by Walter J. Cohn, through Samuel Goldsticker. The new owner, whose name is withheld for the present, will erect on the site a six-story business building.

Record Price on Fourth Avenue.

F. T. Barry has sold for J. Immen to John L. Martin the five-story building, on lot 25 by 80, at the southeast corner of Fourth Avenue and Thirty-second Street, facing the Metropolitan car stable block, concerning which so many rumors have been in circulation recently. The price reported in connection with this transaction, $150,000, establishes a new high record for Fourth Avenue north of Twenty-third Street.

The Fashion Realty Company, of which Gabriel Schwab is President, is the buyer of 388 Fourth Avenue, the sale of which by John L. Martin was reported last week.

Pocher & Co. have sold the four-story building, on lot 25 by 92, at 40 East Twenty-first Street, together with the two-story building, on lot 25 by 92, at 30 East Twentieth Street, for William H. Macy, Jr., to Judson S. Todd.

The Barrington apartment house at 40 East Twenty-fifth Street, sold recently through the McVickar-Gaillard Realty Company, was bought by Thomas Greacen.

Purchase on Thirty-ninth Street.

L. J. Phillips & Co. have sold for Mary M. Taylor 39 West Thirty-ninth Street, a four-story dwelling, on lot 22 by 98.9, to a client, who will lease the property for business purposes.

The Century Realty Company, which for some time has held title to the Old Guard Armory at Broadway and Forty-ninth Street, has acquired the interests of other members of the syndicate controlling the property and is now the sole owner of it. John N. Golding conducted the negotiations.

A. S. Sherwood has resold 727 Seventh Avenue, three-story front and rear buildings on lot 25 by 100. Mr. Sherwood bought the parcel at auction in March for $38,600.

Builder Buys on 141st Street.

Duff & Brown have sold for Mrs. J. A. Booth to a builder, for improvement, the lot, 25 by 100, on the west side of Amsterdam Avenue, 75 feet north of One Hundred and Forty-first Street.

Max Marks has sold to Moss & Feiner the northeast corner of Ninth Avenue and Two Hundred and Tenth Street, a plot 100 by 99.11.

Thomas & Son have moved their office from 1,742 Amsterdam Avenue to 1,766 Amsterdam Avenue.

Money Grows:

When wisely invested in Real Estate faster and more surely than in any other way. This is not a bright idea but a fact; no investment is so safe and in no other way can a man feel he has so surely provided for his family. By the terms I offer at Larchmont Park, a man can, after making an initial payment, pay for his land in monthly payments no greater than he is now paying for rent, and at the end of four years his land is entirely paid for, besides being a great deal more valuable than when he bought it. Larchmont Park is a high class residential property fully restricted.

Let me tell you all about it.
